Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department plans to issue to landowners regarding public liability insurance as a result of his Department's plans to provide a statutory right of access to open countryside. [76792]

Mr. Meacher: It is, in the first instance, for individual landowners and their advisers to decide what insurance, including public liability insurance, is most appropriate for their needs. The Government have made clear that the liability owed by landowners to people exercising a new statutory right of access will be limited to that owed to trespassers.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the extra public liability insurance costs for landowners as a result of his Department's plans to provide a statutory right of access to open countryside. [76796]

Mr. Meacher: The Government do not expect a new statutory right of access on foot to open countryside to have a significant impact on public insurance costs for landowners. An economic appraisal study for the Government by independent consultants suggests that any increase in the public liability insurance premium will be small.

Homelessness

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to place on local councils a statutory duty to protect the homeless. [77088]

Ms Armstrong: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love) on Monday 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 519–20.

Roads Maintenance

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to introduce public/private partnerships for the maintenance of roads. [77179]

Dr. Reid: Existing DBFO contracts already cover a significant proportion of the maintenance obligations for the trunk roads network. We have announced that we intend to increase this through pursuing the DBFO procurement method for certain schemes announced in the Accelerated Review and in our targeted programme of improvements. In addition, we are currently examining the scope for further public private partnerships for trunk road maintenance.

London Transport Plans

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the first local transport plans will be published; and when he expects such plans to be placed on a statutory basis. [77178]

Dr. Reid: Local highway authorities in England (outside London) need to submit their provisional local transport plans (LTPs) to the Department by 31 July. Full LTPs are to be submitted by 31 July 2000. Publication is a matter for the local authorities, but we expect LTPs to be readily available locally.

We believe there would be advantages in making LTPs statutory and propose to legislate in due course. However, LTPs can be implemented on an administrative basis, which will provide an opportunity to test the system and identify the necessary requirements of any subsequent legislation.

House Sales

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he has put in place to tackle problems arising from the non-enforceability of verbal agreements to sell houses. [77011]

Ms Armstrong: The Government published for consultation on 7 December 1998 a package of proposals aimed at making the home buying and selling process easier and more efficient. The consultation period ends on 31 March. We will consider carefully responses to the consultation in reaching conclusions on action required to improve the process in the interests of all responsible home buyers and sellers.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1998, Official Report, column 48, what representations he has received from BNFL Ltd. concerning (a) its investment in Pangea

Resources Inc., and (b) its support for Pangea's plans to construct an international repository for nuclear waste in Australia. [77170]

Mr. Meale: No representations relating to this issue have been received by DETR from BNFL Ltd.

Light Dues

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on light dues. [77456]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am pleased to announce that there will be no changes to the light dues rates for 1999–2000. Current rates were set in 1997, when charges were reduced by an average of 4.6 per cent., following four years of stability. The ability to maintain light dues at current levels is an indication of the General Lighthouse Authorities' continuing efforts to achieve greater efficiency.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Manpower

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in the latest year for which figures are available how many police officers and of what ranks are engaged exclusively in (a) complaints and discipline and (b) drug squad duties in each constabulary in Great Britain; and what is the total manpower of each constabulary. [75908]

Kate Hoey: I can answer only in respect of England and Wales. Information is not available centrally on the number and ranks of police officers engaged exclusively in complaints and discipline duties. The number of officers engaged exclusively in drugs duties in 1997–98 in each force area is in the table. Information is not collected centrally on the ranks of the officers involved. In some forces, the detection of drugs offences will form part of a wider range of responsibilities undertaken by officers.

Figures for the number of officers in each force in England and Wales at the end of September 1998 are also in the table.

Common Market Referendum

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Boston and Skegness (Sir R. Body), of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 553, on the Common Market referendum, which provisions of the Public Records Acts relating to the timing of release of documents apply to the files relating to the referendum. [76365]

Mr. Straw: The 30-year-rule established by section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958, as amended by the Public Records Act 1967, generally applies. However, the Lord Chancellor may give his approval for records more than 30 years old to be retained by the Security Service under section 3(4) of the 1958 Act if they are required for administrative purposes or ought to be retained for any other special reason. In the case of Security Service records, the special reason may be that the records in question contain highly sensitive information relating to national security.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1998, Official Report, columns 80–81, what conclusions he has reached in respect of the requirement to report figures relating to the overbreeding of animals listed in Schedule 2 to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [76515]

Mr. George Howarth: I have not yet reached any conclusions on this issue. There are a number of issues that need to be carefully explored, including the practicalities of collating this information.

Lighter Refills

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the banning of the sale of cigarette lighter refills to under 16-year-olds. [77010]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 10 March 1999, Official Report, column 273.

Victims of Crime

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has put in place to ensure that victims of crime are kept fully informed about the progress of their cases. [77015]

Mr. Boateng: The 1996 Victim's Charter places responsibility on the police for keeping victims informed about significant developments in their case. Pilot projects to establish best ways of doing this were set up later that year. Interim findings of an evaluation managed by the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate and carried out by Bristol University were published late last year, and drawn to criminal justice agencies' attention in Home Office Circular 55/1998 issued on 23 December 1998. This also reminded the police, and other agencies, of their responsibilities for keeping victims informed. A final evaluation report and recommendations are expected later this year, after which it is hoped good practice guidelines can be issued.

Youth Offender Teams

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many youth offender teams have been established; at what cost; and what plans he has to monitor their effectiveness. [77019]

Mr. Boateng: Youth offending teams under section 39 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have been established in 10 areas, by 16 local authorities working in partnership with the police, probation service and health authorities. These areas are piloting the teams, together with new powers for the police and the courts under the 1998 Act, ahead of national implementation. The Government expect all areas of England and Wales to have youth offending teams in place by April 2000, when it intends to implement section 39 nationwide.

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales, established under section 41 of the 1998 Act, is monitoring progress in all areas in preparing for national implementation of the Act's provisions for youth offending teams and other new youth justice measures and will monitor the effectiveness of the new teams in reducing youth offending. The Board is aware that youth offending teams have so far been substantially established on a non-statutory basis in around 35 local authority areas to undertake existing work with young offenders.

The pilots will help the Government better to assess the costs and savings associated with the new youth justice measures. The Government are expecting local authorities and their partner agencies to put in place the basic structure of youth offending teams within existing resources, reflecting the work which staff within those agencies should already be undertaking with young offenders and those at risk of offending. Where local areas are being expected to deliver new services under the 1998 Act, the Government recognise that extra resources may be needed. These were estimated in the Financial Memorandum to the Crime and Disorder Bill and these estimates are now being tested through the pilots.

Crime and Disorder Act 1998

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) local child curfew schemes, (b) parenting orders and (c) anti-social behaviour orders have been made under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [77016]

Mr. Boateng: The power to impose a local child curfew is a permissive one. The decision as to whether or not a local child curfew is appropriate will be one which must be made by a local authority following appropriate local discussion.

The relevant provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 were brought into force on 30 September 1998. Before imposing a local child curfew, local authorities, in consultation with the chief officer of police and such other persons or bodies that they consider appropriate, must first draw up proposals for a local child curfew scheme, including arrangements for consultation with the residents in the area in which the curfew is to apply, and submit these to the Home Secretary for approval.

No applications for local child curfew schemes have been received at this stage. Such schemes are designed to be part of an integrated response to reducing crime and disorder in local areas. In considering their potential use, local authorities will wish to take into account the wider crime and disorder reduction strategies, also required under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, which are currently being developed.

Parenting orders have been available since 30 September 1998 in the nine areas which form the greater part of the youth justice pilot exercise. By the end of January 1999, courts in these nine pilot areas had made 12 parenting orders.

Although the parenting order will be available in several different court arenas, that is, the family proceedings court, a civil magistrates court and all criminal courts, the order has been introduced gradually throughout the youth justice pilot areas. This has been done partly to allow pilot areas to focus initially on the need to establish and operate satisfactorily the new youth offending teams across the full range of existing and new work with juvenile offenders. Also, to see how the parenting order will operate alongside Children Act 1989 based work with children and families in need and to put in place provision for counselling and guidance sessions required under the parenting order.

The provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 in relation to anti-social behaviour order do not come into force until 1 April 1999.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for (a) racially aggravated assaults and (b) racially aggravated harassment under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [77017]

Mr. Boateng: These offences came into force on 30 September 1998. Provisional data for the last quarter of 1998 from the Home Office Court Proceedings database should be available in June with provisional data for each quarter of 1999 becoming available at three monthly intervals thereafter.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug treatment and testing orders have been made under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [77014]

Mr. George Howarth: Thirty drug treatment and testing orders had been made in the Crown Court and magistrates courts in the pilot areas (Croydon, Gloucestershire and Liverpool) as at 12 March 1999.

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has put in place to monitor the effectiveness of sentencing policy. [77018]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office is committed to monitoring the effectiveness of the sentences imposed by the courts, including their effect on reconviction. It does this through the regular collection of statistics and ad hoc research. All major new initiatives in the field of sentencing policy, as in other areas of criminal justice activity, are accompanied by measures to monitor their effectiveness. In addition, three sentencing projects are being funded under the crime reduction programme. These are in the areas of fine enforcement, restorative justice and the information available to sentencers and are aimed at improving the cost-effectiveness of sentencing.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with other European countries on co-operation for tapping on request of (i) land lines, (ii) cellular telephones and (iii) electronic mail; what is the intended role of Europol; which countries outside the European Union are involved; what discussions he has had with the United States Government on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [76300]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 12 March 1999]: A working group operating under the European Union Justice and Home Affairs Council is currently considering a draft Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance which contains proposals for co-operation on the interception of telecommunications. The text of the draft Convention does not distinguish between the kinds of telecommunications mentioned in the Question. The German Presidency has also proposed a draft Council Resolution on the lawful interception of new technologies such as the Internet and satellite communications. The latest texts of these proposals have been submitted to the European Scrutiny Committees for their consideration. Copies are in the Library. This matter has been discussed at formal meetings of the Justice and Home Affairs Council, in which I and other Home Office Ministers have participated, and informally with other European Union Interior Ministers.

I am not aware of any proposal for Europol to be involved in co-operation on interception matters between member states.

The draft Convention and Council Resolution apply only to the European Union. Ministers have not discussed them with the United States Government.

Mr. Wilson: The excellence of many British products and services means that there are prospects for increasing UK trade in all markets to which our companies have access.

Export Licences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under what circumstances (a) designs and (b) designs backed up by training or implementation services, require an export licence. [76123]

Dr. Howells: Specified exports of technology, including designs, are subject to control under various entries in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1996, and Council Decision 94/942/CFSP, and the controls apply irrespective of whether or not the technology is linked to the provision of training on its use or implementation.

At present, as noted in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls, published in July 1998, HMG can control only tangible exports, which means that export licences are currently required for controlled technology only when this is exported in physical form e.g. on paper or computer disc. However, the White Paper contained a proposal to provide HMG with the power to control the transfer of technology, whatever the means of transfer, and proposals for the use of that power.

Firework Safety

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the fireworks injuries statistics for the 1998 firework season; and if he will make a statement. [77007]

Dr. Howells: The total number of persons recorded as requiring treatment at hospital casualty departments in Great Britain during the 1998 firework season was 831. This represents a reduction of over 8 per cent. on the previous year's total. Within the overall reduction, there was a 36 per cent. fall in injuries caused by sparklers. My Department's firework safety campaign highlighted the risk of injury from sparklers and I am particularly pleased that this message has been heeded.

The number of serious injuries fell from 71 in 1997 to 46 last year. Figures also reveal a 12 per cent. drop in hooligan injuries after 21 areas were targeted by my department in partnership with local councils during the campaign to stamp out this anti-social behaviour.

I am arranging for copies of a summary of the injury figures to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Detailed analytical and regional tables will be published soon.

US Import Duties

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will compensate Cornflower Fine Art Publishers of Reading for the increase in their export costs to the United States as a result of the increase in United States import tariffs; and if he will make a statement; [76778]

(2) what assessment he has made on the loss of revenue to Kew Gardens as a result of the increase in United States import duties; and if he will make a statement. [76776]

Mr. Wilson [holding answers 15 March 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 4 March 1999, Official Report, columns 1223–29, that the Government had decided to establish a scheme for the cashmere knitwear industry to guarantee the bonds requested by the United States. The mere threat of US action had been having a particularly significant effect on cashmere, in view of the highly seasonal nature of that industry. The precise details and scope of the bond scheme have still to be decided.

The Government are very aware of the effect that the US action may have not only on the various industry sectors targeted by the US (including lithographs), but also on the possible implications for others in the UK involved with those sectors.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the United States Government on a resolution of the present dispute over United States increased import tariffs; and if he will make a statement. [76783]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 15 March 1999]: It is of course the European Commission that acts for the European Union on this matter. The UK Government have also discussed this with the US Administration at every level. We have repeatedly made clear our desire to see the dispute resolved within the WTO framework. We have stressed that US retaliatory action will do nothing to resolve the underlying dispute, which is about the compatibility with WTO rules of the EU's revised bananas regime. We have urged the US to abide by the WTO process currently under way, which offers the best prospect for a resolution of this dispute.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate (a) how many United Kingdom companies will incur increased export costs as a result of the increase in United States import tariffs, (b) how many companies Her Majesty's Government have compensated for the increase in their export costs, (c) the cost to public funds of this compensation, (d) the nature of the exports of each company and (e) the cost to United Kingdom businesses of the increase in United States import duties. [76782]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Against the background of historical levels of exports in each sector, it is not possible to say what the overall impact might be. Much will depend on how long any retaliatory measures remain in place, the ability of the affected firms to find alternative customers and local labour market conditions. The precise details of the bond scheme announced by the Government on 4 March 1999, Official Report, columns 1223–29, have still to be decided. No companies have therefore been compensated so far. The sectors affected by the US action are: cashmere sweaters; batteries; plastics; biscuits; bath oils; candles; lithographs; bed linen; cartons; coffee makers; wallets; handbags; cheese; and felt paper.

Minister for Science

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions the Minister for Science has had with the Wellcome Trust concerning their applications for planning permission at Hinxton Hall in South Cambridgeshire. [76069]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 March 1999]: None.

Milk Marque

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the conclusions of the MMC investigation into Milk Marque. [76901]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 March 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is required to publish all monopoly reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The report will be published as soon as is practicable.

Supermarkets

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the conclusions of the Office of Fair Trading report of their investigation into the trading practices of the main supermarkets in the United Kingdom. [76900]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 March 1999]: It is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading to decide what he will publish regarding his investigation into the profitability of the major supermarkets in the grocery sector. I understand that he hopes to be in a position to announce his conclusions by the end of this month.

Edgar Fernandes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Minister of State will take up the case of Edgar Fernandes during his visit to Turkey. [76428]

Mr. Wilson: The purpose of my visit to Turkey is to promote British trade. British consular staff in Ankara, Istanbul and Valetta continue to monitor closely Turkey's request for the extradition from Malta of the man charged with Mr. Fernandes' murder. They have urged both Governments to act swiftly to resolve this case.

SCOTLAND

Social Work

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to publish the White Paper on Social Work in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [77455]

Mr. Dewar: The White Paper "Aiming for Excellence: Modernising Social Work Services in Scotland" is published today. It contains the answers to three key questions—What kind of social work services do we want? How can they be delivered? How will we know if they are being delivered effectively? It sets out proposals to strengthen the protection of children and vulnerable adults, to support a confident and competent workforce and to ensure high quality services which meet people's needs.

We propose to create a Scottish Commission for the Regulation of Care as the independent regulatory of social work services, whoever provides them. The Commission will register all organisations that provide care gainst agreed criteria and will make regular independent inspections to see that they are met. It will regulate residential care homes and nursing homes, making it easier for homes to offer both forms of care. It will introduce for the first time regulation of care services provided in people's own homes and will also cover all relevant children's services.

We propose that the workforce should be regulated by a Scottish Social Services Council which will have the duty of registering specified groups of staff who have completed approved courses of training as a pre-condition for registration. The Council will also regulate professional and vocational education and will publish codes of conduct and practice. Social work services make a critical contribution to social inclusion, providing crucial support to people at times of personal or family crises. The White Paper also underlines the critical importance for successful services of close and effective partnership working between agencies.

If enacted by the Scottish Parliament, the proposals in this White Paper will strengthen public confidence, creating modern social work services on which we can all rely.

Copies of Command Paper No. CM4288 are available in the Library of both Houses.

Education Budget

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the Scottish Office education budget in cash terms and at 1998–99 prices for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what is his estimate for (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [76866]

Mr. Dewar: The information is as follows:

1995–96	3,553	3,848
1996–97	3,611	3,794

Fossils

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps Scottish Natural Heritage has taken to prevent the illegal removal of important fossils from sites of special scientific interest in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [76938]

Mr. Macdonald: Scottish Natural Heritage is developing a site safeguard plan which will be published shortly.

As from 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Agriculture Improvement Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the budget for the Highlands and Islands Objective 1 area under the agricultural improvement scheme for (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94, (d) 1994–95, (e) 1995–96, (f) 1996–97, (g) 1997–98 and (h) 1998–99; and what is the underspend for each year. [76862]

Mr. Macdonald: The Agricultural Business Improvement Scheme (ABIS) forms part of the Objective 1 Highlands and Islands Agricultural Programme (HIAP), along with the Marketing Scheme and the Crofting Township Development Scheme. There is no separate budget provision for ABIS.

The original budget provision for the HIAP was £23 million, but due to the strength of sterling against the ecu, this figure is now nearer £20 million.

The estimated expenditure and outturn figures from 1994–95, when the programme was launched, to 1998–99 are shown in the table:

£ million

Financial year	PES provision	Expenditure
1994–95	1.600	0.049
1995–96	2.178	1.188
1996–97	4.855	2.528
1997–98	4.836	3.162
1998–99	4.830	[1]2.132

[1] To end February 1999

Total expenditure to date under HIAP is therefore £9.059 million. In addition, there are commitments totalling £4.7 million still to be paid, giving an overall total to date of £13.759 million. The programme remains open for approvals until 31 December 1999 and for payments until 31 December 2001.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Health Budget

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was his Department's health budget in cash terms and at 1998–99 prices for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what is his estimate for (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [76868]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is as follows:

£ million

	Cash terms	1998–99 prices
1995–96	4,105	4,446
1996–97	4,227	4,441
1997–98	4,376	4,485
1998–99	4,626	4,626
1999–2000	4,934	4,814
2000–01	5,225	4,973
2001–02	5,449	5,153

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Special Police Officers

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of (a) full-time and (b) special police officers, by rank and force, for (i) 1999, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2001 and (iv) 2002. [76859]

Mr. McLeish: The information is not available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend does not estimate police numbers in future years. Numbers of regular and special constables at the latest date available are shown in the table.

At 31 March 1998

	Number of regular constables	Number of special constables
Central	719	72
Dumfries and Galloway	446	193
Fife	841	132
Grampian	1,226	138
Lothian and Borders	2,621	198
Northern	667	480
Strathclyde	7,186	319
Tayside	1,148	191
Total	14,854	1,723

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Structural Adjustment Programmes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to the IMF and World Development Bank concerning the impact of structural adjustment programmes on health and education programmes. [77168]

Clare Short: In all my discussions with both the Managing Director of the IMF and the President of the World Bank, I have underlined the importance of protecting anti-poverty spending during adjustment. In particular, I have stressed the importance of avoiding interventions which work against the poor having access to health and education services. We were pleased that the 1998 Review of ESAF proposed that the IMF should pay greater attention to the potential social impact of adjustment programmes, drawing on the expertise of the World Bank and paying particular attention to health and education. We are following closely the implementation of these recommendations.

South Africa

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to fund (a) police and (b) army training for the Republic of South Africa. [76250]

Clare Short: We have committed up to £5.5 million since 1994 to help South Africa develop effective civilian oversight of the police. We have provided international expertise to the national Department of Safety and Security, the national Police Service and the Independent Complaints Directorate and contributed to production of a White Paper on Safety and Security. We have supported community policing projects in Western Cape, Free State, Eastern Cape and North-West Provinces.

We have no plans to assist South Africa with army training beyond our contribution of £50,000 to Exercise Blue Crane, a peacekeeping exercise by regional armed forces to take place in South Africa in April.

Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those people she has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76416]

Clare Short: The following appointments have been made during the period in question:

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Ms Jayne Almond (Deputy Chair): annual remuneration £10,000.

Mr. Russell Seal (Non-Executive Board Member): annual remuneration £7,500.

Know How Fund Advisory Board

Baroness Williams of Crosby (Member): unremunerated[1]

Ms Ann McElvoy (Member): unremunerated[1]

Professor Robert Deacon (Member): unremunerated[1]

Development Awareness Working Group

Mr. John Westaway (Member): unremunerated[1]

Ms Gill Beauchamp (Member): unremunerated[1]

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Trusts

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many part-time staff are employed in the (a) North and West and (b) South and East Belfast community trusts; and how many of them are employed by private businesses with contractual relations with the trusts. [75520]

Mr. McFall: The number of part-time staff employed in each Trust is as follows:

(a) North and West Belfast: 1,873

(b) South and East Belfast: 2,290.

None of the part-time staff is employed by private businesses with contractual relations with the trusts.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Radio

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that people in Derby and South Derbyshire can receive digital radio services. [74448]

Janet Anderson: The Government are committed to encourage the take up of digital radio. Responsibility for the roll out of digital radio services across the UK rests with the BBC in accordance with the Royal Charter and Agreement and with the Radio Authority under the framework of the Broadcasting Acts. The BBC national digital radio multiplex is already broadcasting and Digital One's national commercial digital multiplex is expected to commence in the autumn. These national multiplexes will deliver services to the major population centres in Derbyshire, with the lowland populated areas particularly well served. Initially, services may not cover some of the more remote areas in the county where they are shielded from signals by local terrain. It may be necessary to consider improvements to coverage in future transmission plans, in the light of initial experience.

Tourism

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to promote tourism in the North West of England; and if he will make a statement. [76362]

Janet Anderson: The North West, like all parts of England, benefits from the work of the British Tourist Authority and of the English Tourist Board. For 1998–99, the BTA has a grant of £35 million and the ETB a grant of £9.7 million, of which £292,000 is for the North West Tourist Board. New support structures for tourism in England, announced on 14 December, must ensure that more effective use is made of this money in the future, with a greater proportion going to the regions.

The Government's new tourism strategy, "Tomorrow's Tourism" which was published on 26 February, sets out specific proposals for action by Government, local authorities, tourist boards and the industry to promote the sustainable development of a modern, competitive, high quality tourism industry. This will benefit all regions, including the North West.

BBC On-line

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the estimated expenditure on BBC on-line over the next three years. [76163]

Janet Anderson: Total expenditure on BBC on-line to date is as follows:

Date	£ million
1998–99	23.1
1999–2000	23.4 (forecast)

Levels of expenditure in years after 1999–2000 have not yet been determined.

Gardens (Funding)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support (a) his Department and (b) the National Lottery give to gardens. [76162]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department does not directly fund gardens. However, English Heritage (EH) can offer grants under its Historic Parks and Gardens Grant Scheme and in recent years it has offered an average of £200,000 per year to garden projects. In the past three years it has assisted 20 sites. Grants are, however, restricted to outstanding historic gardens which are graded I and II* on EH's Register of Parks and Gardens of Special Historic Interest in England. EH is also currently considering a new integrated grant scheme for gardens, buildings and monuments.

The Heritage Lottery Fund, National Lottery Charities Board and UK Arts Councils have to date contributed over £84 million to over 223 projects which create, restore or enhance gardens.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 March that £125 million of Lottery money will be made available through the New Opportunities Fund, under its Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities Initiative, to help urban and rural communities across the UK to understand, improve and care for their natural and living environment and improve the overall quality of their surroundings. Gardens may well benefit from this new initiative.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Information Superhighway

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools have to date been linked to the information superhighway and at what cost; and when he estimates that all schools will have been linked to the information superhighway and at what total cost. [74760]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department published last year the results of a survey of ICT provision in schools which indicated that 17 per cent. of primary schools and 83 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet by March 1998. This is in comparison to the previous year's survey (published in 1997), which indicated that 5 per cent. of primary schools and 47 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet at that time. Subsequent annual surveys will indicate the change in growth of schools with such connections, although the latest estimates from British Educational Communications and Technology Agency (BECTA) are that approximately 30 per cent. of primary schools, 90 per cent. of secondary schools and 45 per cent. of special schools in England currently have some form of Internet access. The Government are committed to ensuring that all schools are connected to the Internet by 2002.

The Government are supporting expenditure of over £700 million during the period 1998–2002 on the National Grid for Learning Standards Fund. This is enabling schools to connect to the information superhighway and equip themselves with the networking infrastructure and information and communications technology to make best use of it. It is not possible to break down this figure into the precise amount that schools spend on use of the Internet.

Opportunity for Youth

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy on the development of an Opportunity for Youth strand to the European Communities budget. [76277]

Mr. Mudie: The European Commission has proposed an action programme for youth from the year 2000 that includes support for young people undertaking projects to develop their initiative and enterprise. The Government are participating positively in negotiations with other Member States on the content of the new programme.

Class Sizes

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils in Oxfordshire at (a) primary school, (b) Key Stage 1, (c) Key Stage 2 and (d) secondary schools were in classes of 31 or more pupils taught by one teacher in (i) January 1997, (ii) January 1998 and (iii) January 1999. [76761]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 March 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 776, and my subsequent letter of 24 February 1999, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Information on Class Sizes (Provisional) in Maintained Primary Schools in England: January 1999 will be published in April.

National Curriculum

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to implement the curriculum recommendations of the Panel for Education for Sustainable Development. [76967]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to take the Panel's recommendations into account in their review of the National Curriculum. This will inform the forthcoming consultation about changes to the National Curriculum from September 2000.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 14 October 1998, 7 January and 11 February 1999 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. W. Jackson. [76940]

Mr. Mudie: A reply to Mr. Jackson's letter will be issued today, 16 March 1999.

Suicides

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to reduce the rate of suicide among young men by introducing education in schools to help children recognise the symptoms of depression and sources of help. [76578]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department for Education and Employment, together with the Department of Health, announced the Healthy Schools Initiative in May 1998. This will support personal, social and health education in schools and address the issue of emotional health and well being. As part of the initiative we have established the Wired for Health website, providing health information initially for teachers, and later for pupils and students. The site provides a link between the Young Minds Website and the Royal College of Psychiatrists fact sheets on child and adolescent mental health. We will be expanding the information relating to mental health on the website in due course.

The Government regard children with emotion and behavioural difficulties and mental health problems as having special educational needs. Preventing the development of these problems is a key element of our policy. The recently published Action Programme, "Meeting Special Educational Needs" flagged as priorities measures targeted at young children to prevent them developing problems, and to strengthen provision for older children. Such activities were eligible for support under the 1999–2000 Standards Fund, and approximately 20 Local Education Authorities are to be supported to undertake pilot projects in this field.

Autistic Children

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what action he has taken since the research project commissioned in 1993 by his Department and the Department of Health into under-identification of autistic children; [76400]

(2) what statutory provisions require a local education authority in England and Wales to provide a relevant education service for an individual child with autistic spectrum disorder; and if he will make a statement; [76401]

(3) if he will institute a public inquiry into the educational services provided for children with autistic spectrum disorder in the United Kingdom; [76403]

(4) what steps the Government have taken to implement the recommendations of the Health Committee's report on health services for children and young people in the community and school (HC 314 of session 1996–97) in respect of education services for children with autistic spectrum disorder. [76440]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under Part IV Chapter 1 of the Education Act 1996, local education authorities are required to identify and assess children with special educational needs who may require provision beyond that which can normally be met from within the resources of local schools, and to arrange suitable provision where necessary. This includes children with autistic spectrum disorders.

The final report of the research project commissioned in 1993 by the Departments for Education and Employment and Health, "A Descriptive and Comparative Study of Current Interventions for Children with Autism"

(Jones, Meldrum, Newson; University of Nottingham, June 1995) found under-identification of children with autism and a shortfall in specialist provision.

The Government are implementing an SEN Action Programme, announced in November 1998, designed to improve provision for all children with special educational needs, including those with autism. This followed wide-ranging consultation and takes into account the University of Nottingham's report and the Health Committee's recommendations, contained in "The Specific Health Needs of Children and Young People". Last year my Department published a report on existing research into the educational interventions for children with autism which will complement current research into the provision made for such children, commissioned by the Local Government Association. We will consider the findings of the latter research carefully once they are available.

Provision for children with autism in the rest of the United Kingdom is a matter for my hon. Friends the Secretaries of State of Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Investors in People

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking regarding the alleged misuse by Classic Collections (UK) Ltd., Slough, of the Investors in People logo; and if he will make a statement. [76129]

Mr. Mudie: The guardianship of the intellectual property and associated trademarks of the Investors in People Standard is a matter for Investors in People UK.

I understand that the Compliance Unit of Investors in People UK received satisfactory assurances on 3 March from the Chairman of Genesis Marketing, the company which owns Classic Collections, that they would cease use of the logo immediately.

Schools (Exclusions)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) permanent and (b) temporary exclusions there have been over the last five years. [75023]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following table shows the number of permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England for each of the school years for which information is available centrally. Data on permanent exclusions in 1997–98 are currently being collated and will be published later this year.

Permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England

Year	Number of permanent exclusions
1996–97	12,668

The Department does not currently hold information on fixed period (temporary) exclusions. The Department plans to collect information about fixed period exclusions of more than five days from the end of the 1998–99 school year. This information will be used to set a baseline for a national target of a one third reduction in fixed period exclusions by 2002.

The Government will be spending £493 million over the next three years on initiatives to reduce truancy and exclusions, including the provision of more on-site units in schools for disruptive pupils.

Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76411]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is given in the following table. My hon. Friend will wish to note that this information will be in the Department's Annual Report when it is published this year.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount spent by the WDA in each local authority area in Wales for each of the last five years. [72371]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 25 February 1999]: As the details of the amounts spent by the WDA in each local authority in Wales for the last five years are lengthy, they have been placed in the Library.

NHS Training and Education

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what data his Department collects on expenditure on NHS training and education and its distribution. [76943]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information is as follows:

Departmental expenditure on NHS education and training in 1998–99 is summarised in the table:

Budget	Expenditure £ (estimated out-turn)	Recipient(s)
Service Increment For Training (Trusts)	18,544,000	NHS Trusts involved in undergraduate teaching
Service Increment For Training (GPs)	291,500	Training practices
Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education	10,320,000	University of Wales College of Medicine, NHS Trusts and Health Authorities
Central contribution to salaries of doctors in postgraduate training	26,566,000	NHS Trusts
Postgraduate Pharmaceutical Education	703,000	University of Wales College, Cardiff
Postgraduate Optical Education	28,000	British College of Optometrists, London
Other training of health professionals	41,605,000	Higher education institutions

Trusts and GPs involved in medical and dental undergraduate training are reimbursed through Service Increment For Training (SIFT) for the ancillary costs incurred as a result of training activity. SIFT money is allocated on a basis that reflects historical costs, but also changing student numbers and distribution.

The Department's direct contribution of £10,320,000 to postgraduate medical and dental education and training includes a one-off payment of £500,000 from the Welsh Office Primary Care Initiative. This budget is managed and accounted for by the Post-Graduate Dean, UWCM. In addition, the Department contributes towards the salaries of doctors in training, in recognition of the time they spend on their studies. Contracts for education and training of health professionals other than doctors and dentists in higher education institutions in Wales are managed by the Education Purchasing Unit of the Welsh Health Common Service Authority (which will become part of the Department when WHCSA is abolished), which monitors student numbers and pays invoices monthly.

In addition, the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales fund medical and dental undergraduate degrees (and funded degrees in certain other health-related subjects until the end of the 1997–98 academic year), but their funding is calculated on the basis of overall numbers of students in each College, not numbers of students taking particular courses.

The Department does not monitor that expenditure on education and training which is undertaken by Trusts themselves, though this is included in Trusts' annual accounts together with expenditure on research.

Trust expenditure includes training purchased from the NHS Staff College. The College receives support from Health Authorities, which totalled £1,278,000 in 1997–98.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estimated surplus or deficit of each health authority in Wales in 1998–99. [74378]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1999, c. 175]: I regret that two of the figures given in the answer were incorrect. A corrected answer is as follows:

The estimated surplus/(deficit) that health authorities and their Trusts will be incurring in 1998–99 is as follows:

Health authority area	£ million
Bro Taf	(5)
Dyfed Powys	(13)
Gwent	—
Iechyd Morgannwg	(2)
North Wales	(1)
Wales	(21)

Note:
These forecasts are based on health bodies' best estimates of their income and expenditure position, and are subject to audit adjustment. The final position will be reported in their 1998–99 annual accounts, which will be available in audited form at the end of July 1999.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will become a matter for the National Assembly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Spain

15. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current state of relations between the United Kingdom and Spain. [74921]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have already given earlier in the House today to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), Official Report, columns 867-68.

MOX Fuels

19. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) assessment he has made of and (b) recent representations he has received concerning the proliferation dangers posed by the use and transport of plutonium-based MOX fuels. [74925]

Mr. Fatchett: The proliferation risks posed by the use of Mixed Oxide Fuel (MOX) by European Union countries and its transport from EU suppliers to Japan are assessed as being extremely low. Indeed, the use of MOX fuel reduces proliferation risks by gradually reducing plutonium stockpiles.

I am aware only of representations made by the Fijian-based Pacific Concerns Resource Centre Inc to HMG in August 1998.

Indonesia

21. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Indonesia. [74928]

Mr. Fatchett: We enjoy a positive bilateral relationship and look forward to continuing to work with the Government of Indonesia in their efforts to bring about peaceful, democratic reform and economic recovery.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1999, Official Report, column 490, on Indonesia, what information he has received from President Habibie since the Minister raised the investigation into the deaths of Malcolm Rennie and Brian Peters in October 1998. [77184]

Mr. Fatchett: I still await a full reply. I will continue to press for information.

Syria

22. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the Amnesty International report on human rights and democratic representation in Syria. [74929]

Mr. Fatchett: We have taken note of the report and of the concerns it raises about political detainees in Syria. We raise human rights with the Syrians both bilaterally and together with EU partners.

East Timor

23. Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK policy on the transition of East Timor towards independence. [74930]

26. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made towards resolving the issue of the status of East Timor. [74933]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to support the efforts under UN auspices to secure a future for East Timor which will fully respect the interests and legitimate aspirations of the East Timorese people. We hope that the Indonesian Government's recent announcement on East Timor, including their willingness to envisage independence, will prove to be a turning point.

St. Helena

24. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the restoration of full British citizenship to residents of the island of St. Helena. [74931]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The issue of British citizenship for those citizens of the UK Overseas Territories who do not already have it was considered as part of our review of policy towards the UK Overseas Territories. The outcome will be contained in the Overseas Territories White Paper, which will be published this week.

Kosovo

25. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to secure peace and conformity with international legal obligations in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [74932]

32. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kosovo. [74939]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom has played a leading role in international efforts, including in the UN, in NATO, in the EU, in the Contact Group—particularly as co-chairman of the talks which began in Rambouillet in February—and on the ground, to promote a peaceful settlement of the crisis in Kosovo and persuade the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and representatives of the Kosovar Albanians to comply with their obligations to the people of Kosovo and to the international community, including those set out in successive UN Security Council resolutions. This week's resumed negotiations in France are a key element in those efforts.

British Council

27. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future funding of the British Council. [74934]

Mr. Fatchett: As a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Government have been able to secure for the British Council £133.1 million in the first year, rising to £138.9 million in the third year. This means a real increase of about £2 million for each of those years. The British Council now has the resources to continue the excellent work it does and to develop further programmes.

Iran

28. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Iran. [74935]

Mr. Fatchett: In September last year, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and the Iranian Foreign Minister, Mr. Kharrazi, came to an agreement concerning the Rushdie case. We hope that this agreement will provide the basis for further positive developments in the relationship between Iran and the UK.

Lebanon

29. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with Lebanon. [74936]

Mr. Fatchett: We enjoy good relations with Lebanon.

Kashmir

30. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent meeting and agreements between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan; and if he will launch a new initiative regarding the situation in Kashmir. [74937]

Mr. Fatchett: We welcome the recent talks between the Indian and Pakistani Prime Ministers in Lahore, and applaud their joint commitment to intensify efforts to resolve bilateral issues, including Kashmir. We wish them every success in their efforts to find solutions to these problems.

33. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of India and Pakistan regarding the composition of those undertaking talks between the two countries on the issue of Kashmir. [74940]

Mr. Fatchett: We regularly discuss Kashmir with representatives of India and Pakistan. We welcome the joint commitment made in Lahore by the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan to intensify efforts to resolve all bilateral issues, including Kashmir.

Wye Agreement

31. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet President Arafat to discuss the implementation of the Wye agreement; and if he will make a statement. [74938]

Mr. Fatchett: President Arafat visited London on 11 March at the personal invitation of the Prime Minister. In addition to talks with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, he attended a dinner that I hosted at Lancaster House. This visit provided us with a valuable opportunity to explore ways that Europe can help get Wye back on track.

Together with our EU partners, we have deplored the failure to complete implementation of the Wye River Memorandum within the declared deadline. We continue to urge both sides to implement their obligations in full and without new conditions.

Sierra Leone

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Sierra Leone. [74941]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The security situation in Sierra Leone remains fragile following the renewed fighting in Freetown at the start of the year, when rebel forces caused appalling violence and destruction.

We continue to support strongly the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone, and the efforts of the Nigerian-led West African force, ECOMOG, to protect the civilian population and deliver lasting peace and stability.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many matching pledges of financial support have been received to date from the international community to match the £10 million package for Sierra Leone. [77172]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A number of pledges of support for Sierra Leone have been received from the international community following the announcement of the UK £10 million package of assistance. So far, confirmed new pledges have been received from the European Commission, the United States, Italy and Sweden, totalling over £5 million. Several other countries have undertaken to consider making new contributions to Sierra Leone. We welcome the fact that others are now following our lead in helping to promote lasting peace in Sierra Leone.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 1999, Official Report, column 2, if he will spend any part of the £10 million additional support for Sierra Leone in the event of no matching pledges of financial support being received from other countries. [77171]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Treasury has stipulated that access to the Reserve for up to £10 million for Sierra Leone is conditional upon matching new pledges of support from other international donors. The UK £10 million will be disbursed as we receive these matching pledges from other donors.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the embassies and high commissions which contacted their host country about financial support for Sierra Leone, indicating whom they contacted and when; and if he will place a copy of the letter of contact in the Library. [77173]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 2 March, Posts in European Union Member States, and Posts in key countries of the Sierra Leone Contact Group, as well as in other key international donor countries, were instructed to lobby for additional support to Sierra Leone in response to the announcement of the new UK £10 million package of assistance. We continue to receive responses from these countries. The telegram instructing Posts to make contact is classified, and it would therefore not be appropriate to place a copy in the Library.

Turkey

35. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations with Turkey. [74942]

Ms Quin: We attach considerable importance to our relations with Turkey, and pursue dialogue on a wide range of issues.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is in regular contact with the Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr. Cem.

Russian Arms Supplies (Middle East)

36. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Russia about the supply of weapons to countries in the middle east. [74943]

Ms Quin: During my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's visit to Russia on 2–5 March, he discussed with Foreign Minister Ivanov the dangers of arms exports and assistance to countries of concern, including the recent speculation about Russian arms exports to Iraq. He has noted the Russian Government's strong statements that they are committed to upholding UN sanctions.

Euro

37. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with other EU member states about Britain joining the euro. [74944]

Ms Quin: There has been no recent discussions on joining the Euro in EU Council meetings. We do, however, keep our partners informed of the Government's position, most recently following the statement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 February 1999.

EU Enlargement

38. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the timetable for enlarging the European Union to include the first group of applicant countries. [74945]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Rammell), Official Report, column 883.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 148, and the answers I gave the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 16 February 1999, Official Report, columns 751–54, and 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 199.

Pakistan

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Pakistan. [74923]

Mr. Fatchett: United Kingdom/Pakistan relations are long-standing and friendly. We have a continuing dialogue on a wide variety of issues of mutual concern.

Algeria

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the European Union is taking in respect of human rights violations in Algeria. [76871]

Mr. Fatchett: The European Union takes a close interest in allegations of human rights violations in Algeria. It raises its concerns at both bilateral and multilateral level. The first bilateral dialogue of substance took place in January 1998, when I led the EU Troika of Ministers to Algiers. The presidency has had two further meetings with the Algerian Government since, in Palermo last June led by Robin Cook, and Vienna last October. In Vienna, the Algerian Government agreed to consider individual human rights cases put forward by the presidency. I submitted the UK's contribution, supported by Amnesty International, to the presidency in January.

On a multilateral level, such as the UN Commission on Human Rights, the EU works to persuade the Algerian Government to co-operate with UN human rights instruments and institutions. This year, the UK will work with the EU to try and persuade the Algerians to invite in UN Special Rapporteurs on Extra-judicial Executions and on Torture.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to strengthen the measures taken by the European Union in respect of human rights violations in Algeria. [76872]

Mr. Fatchett: We support efforts by the European Union to establish a constructive dialogue with the Algerian Government on the issue of human rights. These efforts take place at both a multilateral and bilateral level and have made genuine progress in the past six months.

At this year's UN Commission on Human Rights, the UK will encourage the EU to urge the Algerian Government to invite in UN Special Rapporteurs on Extra-judicial Executions and on Torture.

British Passport Holders

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on how his Department deals with (a) complaints and (b) inquiries regarding missing or abducted British passport holders in the Indian sub-continent when the persons involved hold dual nationality. [76405]

Mr. Fatchett: Complaints received from hon. Members are answered by Ministers, those from the public may also be answered by Ministers or by the relevant Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) department.

Inquiries about missing or abducted British nationals in the Indian Sub-continent are handled by Consular Division in the FCO, or by our overseas diplomatic and consular missions. Our ability to help dual nationals in the country of their second nationality is limited by international law.

Arms Exports

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish the first annual report on arms exports; and if he will list and define the arms categories to be covered. [76870]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will publish the report as soon as possible. As regards the content of the report, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149.

Recruitment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of those recruited at the policy entrant point were women in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, and (c) 1998. [77183]

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the review of family policies within his Department in the Library. [77174]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of the list of family policies which was drawn up following a process of review of family policies in 1997–98. It includes several items which were added as a result.

Select Committee Reports

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) of 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 876, from whom his office received (a) the command paper version of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee's report on Human Rights shortly before its publication in December 1998 and (b) the draft version of the Foreign Affairs Committee's report on enlargement. [77095]

Mr. Robin Cook: My office received the command paper version of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee's report on Human Rights from the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross).

There was nothing on the draft version of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Report on enlargement to indicate its source. The hon. Member for Dundee, West has made clear to us that he did not send the document.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning BNFL Ltd.'s (a) investment in Pangea Resources Inc. and (b) support for Pangea's plans to construct an international repository for nuclear waste in Australia. [70290]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 9 February 1999]: On the answers to (a) and (b) (i), and (ii) I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 4 November 1998, Official Report, column 601, and to the answer I gave to the hon. Lady on 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 146.

(iii) The reports from our Embassy in Madrid of 12 November 1997 and 23 January 1998 were read at desk level; the reports of 15 and 16 October 1998 were read at senior official level, and drawn on in briefing the Foreign Secretary orally on 16 October before Senator Pinochet was detained.

(iv) FCO officials were informed of the request to interview Senator Pinochet from the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid on 14 October. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was briefed on this request at the same time as he was informed of the request for Senator Pinochet's provisional arrest on 16 October.

(v) The FCO was informed of the issuing of a warrant for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet by the Bow Street Magistrate late on the evening of 16 October. The Foreign Secretary was immediately informed.

TACIS Programme

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) of 5 March 1999, Official Report, column 940–42, on the General Affairs Council, for what reasons funds from the Russian TACIS programme were transferred to the European Community Humanitarian Office; and if the issue of fraud was raised in the course of this stage of deliberations. [76368]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

TACIS is a technical assistance programme wherever this European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO) provides emergency humanitarian relief. However, the need in this particular case was for emergency assistance. Transferring funds from TACIS to ECHO is the best way to address these needs while at the same time respecting overall budgetary ceilings. There has been no suggestion of fraud in discussion of the transfer.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 739, on Iraq, from whom he received the account of the episode relating to the 16-year-old Iraqi youth. [72887]

Mr. Fatchett [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1999, c. 511]: An administrative error led to a mistake in my answer to the hon. Member of 15 March. The correct answer should read as follows:

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary received the information from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Company Licences

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) small and medium-sized enterprises and (b) larger companies (i) all licences and permits issued by his Department and its agencies to companies permitting them to carry out their business, (ii) the cost of each such licence or permit in (A) 1997–98 and (B) 1999–2000 and (iii) the current number of companies which are in receipt of each such licence or permit. [76848]

Mr. Timms: We issue no licences or permits.

Housing Benefit Fraud

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the level of fraud in respect of housing benefit in (a) Bolton, (b) the North West and (c) England. [75621]

Mr. Timms: There are no figures available regarding the level of Housing Benefit fraud in Bolton.

The results of the 1997–98 Housing Benefit Accuracy Review provide the estimates shown in the table for the percentage of the Housing Benefit caseload in 1997–98 within each of the categories.

	Percentage of caseload	Confidence limits
North West
Confirmed fraud	1.6	Below 0.05–3.4
Strong suspicion of fraud	4.3	1.9–6.8
Mild suspicion of fraud	1.1	Below 0.05–2.7
England
Confirmed fraud	1.5	0.8–2.3
Strong suspicion of fraud	4.1	1.8–7.2
Mild suspicion of fraud	1.2	0.7–2.0
Great Britain
Confirmed fraud	1.9	1.3–2.6
Strong suspicion of fraud	4.0	1.9–6.8
Mild suspicion of fraud	1.1	0.7–1.7

Note:

The main figures provide the best estimate from the review for the percentage of the Housing Benefit caseload in 1997–98 within each of the categories. These estimates are uncertain since conclusions about the level of fraudulent payments were derived from evidence from a sample of HB claims. The uncertainty surrounding an estimate derived from a sample can be quantified by calculating "confidence limits". For the table above 95 per cent. confidence limits have been calculated for each of the estimates and are shown in brackets. These limits indicate the range within which we can be 95 per cent. certain that the true value lies. For each estimate derived there is a 5 per cent. chance that the true value lies outside the stated range.

Myalgic Encephalitis

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of myalgic encephalitis sufferers who (a) were in receipt of disability living allowance, (b) were appealing against being turned down for disability living allowance or having it withdrawn and (c) had successfully appealed against a decision to refuse payment of disability living allowance at the latest date for which figures are available. [76222]

Mr. Bayley: Figures are not available in the form requested. The available information for a wider group of people, those with Chronic Fatigue Syndromes including myalgic encephalomyelitis and post viral conditions, is in the table.

People claiming Disability Living Allowance whose main disabling condition is chronic fatigue syndrome

	Number
People in receipt of benefit at 31 August 1998	8,900
First awards of benefit between 1 April 1992 and 31 August 1998
All first awards	10,300
awards on initial claim	6,500
awards resulting from review	2,600
awards resulting from appeal	1,300

Notes:

1. People for whom myalgic encephalitis is not their main disabling condition may also receive Disability Living Allowance
2. Figures do not sum owing to rounding

Health and Safety

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of Trillium in managing health and safety issues within the DSS Estate. [77185]

Angela Eagle: Prior to awarding the contract, Trillium's credentials and proposals for managing health and safety across the DSS estate were scrupulously examined by an independent Health and Safety assessor and found to be robust and comprehensive. Post contract, Trillium now have fully trained and qualified health and safety professionals in place throughout the country. Their performance is rigorously monitored by a dedicated contract management team which includes a fully qualified in-house health and safety professional together with a team of technical auditors.

All Trillium's practises and processes are closely monitored to ensure their effectiveness. We are satisfied that all contractual and statutory duties are being met and that they are fully competent to manage health and safety on behalf of the Department.

Benefits (Ministerial Discretion)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance is used by Ministers in determining requests to exercise discretion in relation to individual benefit cases; and if he will place a copy of that guidance in the Library; [76239]

(2) on what grounds the Secretary of State rejected the request by the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire to use his discretion in the case of the overpayment of benefit to Ms Linda Knight of 42 Stalls Farm Road, Droitwich Spa, Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [76237]

Mr. Timms: In individual cases of overpayments the Secretary of State can apply his discretion in relation to the recovery of the overpayment. This discretion is exercised only where recovery would cause extreme hardship. Guidance is contained in "Government Accounting", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances he proposes to make contracting out of the state second pension compulsory. [76154]

Mr. Timms: None.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of (a) widows and (b) widowers who will be claiming income support with the bereavement premium in each of the first five years after implementation of his proposals for bereavement support as set out in paragraph 1 of his consultation paper on bereavement support. [76103]

Angela Eagle: It is estimated that there will be (a) fewer than 5,000 widows and (b) fewer than 5,000 widowers who claim Income Support with the Bereavement Premium in each of the first five years after implementation of our proposals.

Notes:

1. The estimates presented above are broad orders of magnitude. They are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and are our best estimate of the number who might be in receipt of the premium, but are subject to a wide range of uncertainty.

2. Estimates assume that a constant proportion of those affected by the proposed changes to Bereavement Benefits move onto Income Support with the IS bereavement premium.

3. Estimates use information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and forecasts from the Government Actuary's Department concerning the number of men and women affected by the proposed changes.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is his policy that widows and widowers who are bereaved below the age of 55 years will be entitled to claim the proposed income support bereavement premium on reaching the age of 55 years if the qualifying conditions for the premium apply on the basis set out in paragraph 1 of his consultation paper on bereavement support. [76102]

Angela Eagle: No. The proposed bereavement premium in Income Support, and other income-related benefits, will be available only to those men and women who are aged 55 and over at the start of the new arrangements and who are widowed during the subsequent five years. The premium will be payable once their time-limited benefit, Bereavement Allowance, comes to an end.

Family Resources Survey

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence is provided by (a) the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and (b) his Department's administrative data on the housing tenure distribution among pensioners who are (i) receiving income support and (ii) entitled to, but not receiving, income support, and if he will break down his answer for the age groups (1) 60 to 69, (2) 70 to 79 and (3) 80 years or above. [76090]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Percentage

	Age 60–69	Age 70–79	Age 80 or above
Housing tenure
Local authority tenants	50	54	43
Other social tenants	8	10	11
Private renters	6	5	6
Owner occupiers	35	29	38
Other	1	1	2
Total	100	100	100

Notes:

1. Figures are shown as a percentage of the total number of pensioner benefit units receiving income support in each age band.

2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest whole per cent. Rows may not sum to 100% due to rounding.

3. Pensioners are defined as single people or couples where at least one partner is aged over 59 years. Couples are allocated to age bands according to the age of the older partner.

4. Receipt of Income Support is based on respondents' own assessment and may be subject to misreporting.

5. "Local authority tenants" are defined as those households where the landlord was either a local authority/council, a New Town development or Scottish Homes and where the property did not go with the job of anyone in the household. "Other social tenants" are defined as those households where the landlord was either a Housing Association, a co-operative or a charitable trust and where the property did not go with the job of anyone in the household. "Private renters" are defined as those households where the landlord was an employer, friend or relative of a household member, or another private landlord or organisation. "Owner occupiers" are defined as those households that were either owned outright, being bought with the help of a mortgage or loan, or were part rented and part mortgaged.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reviews of disability living allowance were undertaken under the Benefit Integrity Project in 1997–98 and the current financial year to date; and how many reviews it is anticipated will be held in 1999–2000 under the new periodic review system. [76840]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Theresa May, dated 15 March 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many reviews of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) were undertaken under the Benefits Integrity Project (BIP) in 1997–98 and the current financial year to date; and how many reviews it is anticipated will be held in 1999–2000 under the new periodic review system.

It might be helpful to clarify what we mean by a review. I assume from your question that you are referring to the total number of cases that have been, and will be, checked under the BIP using the most available year to date figures, and the total number that are likely to be checked under the periodic review of DLA awards that starts in April 1999. I have answered your question on this basis.

The number of DLA cases that were examined and completed by the BIP in the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 was 72,470. For the period 1 April 1998 to 31 December 1998 (the last available figures), the corresponding figure is 88,117.

A monthly statistical report providing detailed information can be found in the House of Commons library.

Turning now to the number of cases we anticipate dealing with under the new periodic enquiry system from April, the new process will be continually evaluated, refined and developed, in consultation with disabled people and their representatives. Officials will take stock of the findings after six moths. I estimate that over the first six months work will be started on some 10,000 to 15,000 cases, through a mixture of visit and postal enquiry.

I hope that this is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Law Firms (Franchising)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the level of access for rural communities under the proposed new arrangements for the franchising of law firms providing legal aid services. [76287]

Mr. Hoon: It is for the Legal Aid Board, through its 13 Regional Legal Services Committees, to establish the legal needs and priorities of any particular community. Contracts will be granted to those quality assured legal service providers who can satisfy, as far as possible within the financial resources available, the communities' needs and priorities. The RLSC's will continue to monitor needs in their regions so that provision can be adjusted as the needs and priorities change.

HEALTH

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 134–35, on departmental reviews, if he will give an estimated publication date for each of the reviews which have yet to publish their reports. [73966]

Mr. Hutton: The estimated publication date for each of the reviews which have yet to publish their reports are:

	Estimated publication date
Thoracic Surgical Services Review	April 1999
United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority Review	Spring 1999
Mental Health Act Review	July 1999
Review of general anaesthesia and sedation with dental treatment	Late summer
Review of the wheelchair voucher scheme and the provision of electrical and indoor wheelchairs	Spring 1999

Physiotherapists

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many physiotherapists are employed by NHS trusts in each region of England; and how many posts are currently vacant in these regions. [74291]

Mr. Denham: Information on the numbers of physiotherapy staff employed by National Health Service trusts in each region of England as at 30 September 1997 has been placed in the Library. Information on how many posts are currently vacant in these regions is not available centrally.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients were waiting to be seen (a) following GP written referral and (b) following referral to consultation, for each quarter since 30 March 1997 in each (i) health authority and (ii) English region. [74740]

Mr. Denham: Information on outpatient waiting times by health authority is available only from 1998–99.

Available information on the time patients have been waiting for a first outpatient appointment following general practitioner written referral by health authority has been placed in the Library.

NHS Running Costs

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total running cost of the NHS in real terms has been in each year since 1979. [74742]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service total net expenditure, at 1997–98 prices, is shown in the table:

Year	£ million
1978–79	19,575
1979–80	19,899
1980–81	21,919
1981–82	22,399
1982–83	22,810
1983–84	23,045
1984–85	23,494
1985–86	23,597
1986–87	24,494

1995–96	33,795
1996–97	33,822
1997–98	34,664
1998–99	35,961

Note:
Using current GDP deflator estimates

NHS Personnel

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (i) paramedics, (ii) chiropodists, (iii) physiotherapists, (iv) clinical psychologists,

(v) occupational therapists and (vi) speech therapists were practising in (a) the National Health Service and (b) the private sector at the latest available date. [75243]

Mr. Denham: For the available information, I refer my hon. Friend to the "Department of Health NHS Hospital and Community Health Services Non Medical Workforce Census Detailed Results England: 30 September 1997", copies of which are available in the Library. Information is not collected centrally on how many of these grades were practising in the private sector.

Aricept

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost to the NHS of the prescription of the drug Aricept in 1998; and how many prescriptions were issued by each health authority; [75530]

(2) what funds each health authority in England has allocated to consultants and general practitioners for prescribing the drug Aricept in the current year. [75531]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not allocate funds specifically for prescribing the drug Aricept. Health authorities are expected to budget for the prescribing of this drug within their overall allocations.

In the 12 months ending September 1998, 17,000 prescription items for Donepezil Hydrochloride (Aricept) were dispensed in the community. The total net ingredient cost was £1.6 million. The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of a drug and does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charges income. Information for prescriptions dispensed in the year ending December 1998 is not yet available. Information about drugs dispensed in hospitals is not available

Donepezil Hydrochloride was prescribed on the National Health Service in all health authorities in England over the twelve-month period ending September 1998. Information for individual products such as Aricept is not released at health authority level. This is in order to preserve patient, contractor and commercial confidentiality.

NHS Pay and Pensions Enhancements

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is consistent with national guidance for NHS trusts to award pay and pension enhancements (a) on the authority of the Chair and (b) without presenting minutes or reports of remuneration committees to full trust boards. [76131]

Mr. Denham: When dealing with issues of corporate governance, National Health Service trusts should comply with the national guidance contained in the Codes of Conduct and Accountability, which was issued on 28 April 1994, under cover of Executive Letter (94)40, copies of which are available in the Library.

Trust boards are obliged to establish remuneration committees to advise the Board about the appropriate remuneration of the chief executive and other executive directors. However, approval of the remuneration of such key staff would be a decision of the Board.

GP Records

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the incidence of tampering with patients' records by general practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [75922]

Mr. Denham: Allegations that general practitioners have tampered with patients' records are dealt with locally. There is no evidence that tampering occurs to an extent that would warrant a national assessment.

Prescribing

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans his Department has to supply copies of the British National Formulary to all essential users in Norfolk; [75910]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the (a) economic and (b) safety implications of general practitioners prescribing without access to an up-to-date copy of the British National Formulary; [75911]

(3) what guidelines his Department lays down for the distribution of the British National Formulary to health care professionals. [75909]

Mr. Denham: Copies of the British National Formulary are distributed twice yearly free of charge to all health authorities and trusts. They are responsible for ensuring that it is passed to all essential users.

The Department recommends that all general practitioners, community pharmacists, hospital doctors, hospital pharmacists and health authority medical and pharmaceutical advisers should receive the formulary. In addition, where possible, there should also be a reference copy on each hospital ward and in each paramedic ambulance. The Department has no reason to believe these recommendations are not being followed.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on the private sector care industry of the national minimum wage; and if he will make a statement. [75934]

Mr. Hutton: It is not possible to estimate with precision the overall impact of the national minimum wage on the private sector industry. Subject to statutory requirements, terms of employment are a matter for employer and employees.

Front-line Care

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money, in real terms, has been spent on front-line care in the NHS in each year since 1979. [76035]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 March 1999]: Information in the form requested is not available. However, information on expenditure by programme of care within hospital and community health services is provided each year to the Health Select Committee's Public Expenditure Inquiry (HC959), copies of which are available in the Library.

Dental Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health after the publication of the Poswillo Inquiry, how many general dental practitioners underwent training in anaesthesia and equipped their practices to meet the appropriate recommended safety levels; and what contribution his Department made towards this training. [75429]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Following publication of the Poswillo Report the Department allocated £20.4 million to regional health authorities over the three years 1992–95. We do not have a breakdown of the usage of this money to include numbers trained and the amount spent on equipment.

Elderly People (Abuse)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the levels of abuse of elderly people in care; if he will publish this assessment; and if he will make a statement. [76484]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The Department does not keep data on incidents of abuse in adult care homes. However, the Department has provided funding to Action on Elder Abuse for its national helpline service. Furthermore, we are funding an analysis of the first one thousand calls which that helpline has received. National guidelines for dealing with incidents of abuse to vulnerable adults are currently being developed, and this work is financed and led by the Department.

Incontinence

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his Department's expenditure on grants to voluntary bodies working on incontinence. [76767]

Mr. Hutton: In 1998–99 the Department has funded the following voluntary organisations for continence projects:

Continence Foundation	35,000
Disabled Living	24,750
InContact	6,250

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) completed, (b) published and (c) commissioned on incontinence. [76768]

Mr. Hutton: The Department funds research and development to support its work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy, which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme. In addition, the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology in the Department of Trade and Industry, funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

The NHS research and development programme is currently supporting the following two projects on incontinence:

Cost-effective night-time management of heavily incontinent adults (Dr. Cottenden, University College London); and

The treatment of urinary incontinence in stroke patients (Professor Castledon, University of Leicester).

The Department's policy research programme supported the following research projects:

The development of methodologies to identify urinary incontinence and set targets for health gain (Professor Pearson, University of Liverpool, completed September, 1995); and

DH Post Doctoral Fellowship, Dr. Brenda Hilary Roe, University of Oxford, completed March, 1996. (Dr. Roe's research project evaluated health interventions by primary health care teams and continence advisory services related to incontinence.)

The MRC spent £953,000 in 1997–98 on the following three ongoing projects in the general area of incontinence:

A randomised trial of open versus laparoscopic colposuspension for genuine stress incontinence, (Professor Kitchener, St. Mary's Hospital);

Incontinence: a population laboratory approach to the epidemiology and evaluation of care, (Dr. McGrother, University of Leicester); and Ion channels in myoctes from human and pig urethra/bladder-modulation by drugs and role in tissue contractile behaviour, (Dr. Brading, University of Oxford).

In addition, the MRC also made grants during the mid 1990s for the following projects:

Can the lower urinary tract be controlled by sacral root stimulation? (Dr. Baxendale, University of Glasgow);

Oestrogen replacement therapy on urinary tract dysfunction and urogenital collagens in postmenopausal women with stress, (Mr. Jackson, Bristol Urological Institute);

Determining the outcome of surgery for stress incontinence in women (Professor Black, London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine).

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his Department's budget and planned expenditure relating to incontinence for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [76766]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally. Local health authorities are responsible for commissioning continence services to meet the needs of their local population. The National Health Service Executive is currently reviewing continence services policy with a view to issuing updated guidance in the spring.

Human Vaccines (Bovine Material)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the last date on which human vaccines containing bovine material prohibited for use in human food were used on humans; [76508]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 8 March 1999, Official Report, column 85, on human vaccines, for what reason he is unable to state how those human vaccines which contain bovine material prohibited for use in the human food chain were disposed of; and if he will make a statement. [76500]

Ms Jowell: No human vaccines for use in the United Kingdom contain or ever have contained in the finished product bovine material prohibited for use in the human food chain. Therefore, no vaccines have ever been disposed of for the reason that they contained bovine material prohibited for use in the human food chain.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has prohibited on ethical grounds the use of primates in xenotransplantation trials. [76501]

Mr. Hutton: We recognise that the use of primates as possible source animals for xenotransplantation is an emotive issue arousing strong feelings. The view taken by the Government, as advised by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority, is that there should be a strong presumption against the use of primates as sources for xenotransplantation. The use of great apes in scientific procedures, including xenotransplantation, has already been ruled out.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how his Department assesses the risk of a new viral disease emerging via xenotransplantation procedures. [76503]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are advised on all issues related to xenotransplantation by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA).

The UKXIRA membership provides an excellent balance of medical and scientific expertise with appropriate lay representation. The authority keeps itself fully updated on all developments in the field and has developed extensive networks, both in this country and abroad, through which to obtain additional specialist advice. For example, the UKXIRA last year hosted a workshop on the possible risks posed by porcine endogenous retroviruses, involving fifty leading experts from the UK and the United States of America. A report of the day's proceedings is due to be published shortly.

Heart Attacks and Strokes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of (a) heart attacks and (b) strokes in each region in each of the last five years. [75961]

Neurological Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what assessment he has made of the current arrangements for consulting on and drawing-up contracts for the provision of neurological services. [72565]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The White Paper, "The new NHS", set out new arrangements for commissioning services through the introduction of long term service agreements. All commissioning in the new National Health Service will take place through service agreements.

Health authorities and primary care groups will be responsible for drawing up service agreements with NHS trusts to deliver improvements in health and health care services which meet the needs of their population.

Increasingly, service agreements will need to reflect the development of long-term relationships between primary care groups and NHS trusts, be based on the shared view of the outcomes of care needed, and cover integrated pathways of care. Guidance on "Commissioning in the new NHS" emphasised that this will apply, in particular, to long-term medical conditions, such as neurological conditions, where, following accurate and timely diagnosis, patient care will largely be managed outside of an acute setting.

A compendium of good practice on the commissioning of neurological services is currently being considered for development in 1999/2000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

These measures will enhance existing controls and provide even greater protection for the health of this vulnerable group of the population.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the number of incidents of harassment of Ministry abattoir inspectors by abattoir staff for each year over the last five years. [66386]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 689.

[1] In addition to 30 national inspectors based in Madrid this includes a further 232 inspectors who work for the autonomous regions. Since the report was published we have been informed that the number of national inspectors for Spain has increased to 53.

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 March 1999]: I am currently seeking information about the level of hygiene inspection charges levied on individual meat plants in other EU Member States. Once I have received this information, I will write to the hon. Member.

No biotechnical companies have placed staff (a) on secondment or (b) on placement within this Department since 1 May 1997.

Pig Industry

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the pig industry in other member states in the European Union is competing with the British pig industry on equal terms in respect of animal welfare. [75894]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 March 1999]: Pig producers in all EU member states are required to comply with the minimum welfare standards laid down in EU Directive 91/630/EEC. [76754]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The regulations introducing the Organic Farming Scheme were laid before the House on 11 March. Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Government keep under review the scope for using economic instruments to complement the planning system.

Customs and Excise (Plymouth)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise units in Plymouth. [75515]

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) he, (b) civil servants in his Department or (c) special advisers in his Department have (i) had sight of drafts of Select Committee reports, in whole or in part, or (ii) been informed of conclusions of select committee reports prior to their publication by the select committees. [75867]

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he or any of his Ministers or his Department's Parliamentary Private Secretaries, advisers or civil servants discussed the contents of the Social Security Committee's report on Child Benefit with any members of the Committee prior to publication of the report; [76079]

(2) if he or any of his Ministers or his Department's parliamentary Private Secretaries, advisers or civil servants received copies of the Social Security Committee's report on Child Benefit prior to its publication; [76077]

(3) if he or any of his Ministers or his Department's parliamentary Private Secretaries, advisers or civil servants received any copies of a draft report of the Social Security Committee on Child Benefit. [76078]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answers 10 and 11 March 1999]: Most of the Treasury's business is dealt with by the Treasury Select Committee, and Treasury Ministers have given evidence to the Committee on several occasions. I have also given oral evidence to the International Development Committee and to the House of Lords Committees on European Legislation and on the Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England. Neither I nor any other Treasury Minister have seen copies or drafts of any report prepared by these Committees prior to their release.

Because the Social Security Committee normally deals with the work of DSS, there have been informal discussions between the Treasury and the Committee on how co-operation can best be achieved. The Committee has been anxious to work with the Treasury in two areas: integration of tax and benefits, and child benefit. To discuss tax and benefits, Treasury and Inland Revenue officials have given oral evidence to the Committee. There was also an informal meeting at 11 Downing Street between the whole Committee and myself. More recently, there have been discussions about how best the Treasury can assist the work of the Committee in matters related to the taxation of child benefit. One issue has been detailed questions about the practicalities of implementing arrangements for taxing child benefit. I have talked to the Chairman of the Committee about Treasury officials and Ministers giving evidence; and Treasury and Inland Revenue officials gave evidence on 24 February 1999. It was agreed that, if requested, a Treasury Minister would appear before the Committee following the Budget. A preliminary draft of a report was given to my Parliamentary Private Secretary, but not the final report. Neither I nor any other Treasury Minister was given or read any copy of reports, draft or otherwise, prior to their release.

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the children's tax credit allowance will be available for use against investment income. [76657]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The children's tax credit will reduce the income tax liability of the person claiming the credit up to a set amount. In 2001–02, that amount will be £4,160 at 10 per cent. It will be available to be set against income tax due on earnings and on other sources of income.

Tax Investigation Notices

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many investigation notices dated 31 January 1999 were issued by the Inland Revenue concerning 1996–97 tax affairs; and if he will make a statement on the implications for revenue collection. [75413]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 March 1999]: A small number of inquiry notices—around 100—were issued on 31 January 1999. In any case where an inquiry notice concerning the Self Assessment tax return for 1996–97 was issued, local tax offices have been advised to inform taxpayers and their agents and to discontinue the inquiry.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of businesses in

(a) Tamworth and (b) Staffordshire who will benefit from the reduction in corporation tax scheduled for April 1999; and if he will make a statement. [75657]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 March 1999]: Nationally about 400,000 companies have a corporation tax liability each year. All will benefit from the cuts in the main and small companies' rates of corporation tax scheduled for April 1999, including an estimated 2,200 of the companies dealt with by the Walsall tax office, which covers Tamworth, and 4,000 of the companies dealt with by tax offices in Staffordshire. Other tax-paying companies trading in these areas will also benefit.

The 1 per cent. reduction in corporation tax rates scheduled for April 1999 builds on the 2 per cent. reduction introduced by this Government from April 1997 and will promote enterprise and encourage investment. The United Kingdom's main rate of corporation tax is the lowest of any major industrialised country.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of how many businesses in the Wakefield District will benefit from changes in corporation tax which were (a) agreed and (b) proposed since 1 May 1997; [74039]

(2) what estimate he has made of how many businesses in Hemsworth constituency will benefit from changes in the rate of corporation tax which were (i) agreed and (ii) proposed since 1 May 1997. [74040]

Dawn Primarolo: Nationally about 400,000 companies have a corporation tax liability each year. All will benefit from the cuts in the main and small companies' rates of corporation tax, including an estimated 700 of the companies dealt with by the Wakefield tax office and 400 of the companies dealt with by the Pontefract tax office which covers Hemsworth. Other tax-paying companies trading in these areas will also benefit.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses in Barnsley and Doncaster will benefit from the proposed reduction in corporation tax scheduled for April. [73371]

Dawn Primarolo: Nationally about 400,000 companies have a corporation tax liability each year. All will benefit from the cuts in the main and small companies' rates of corporation tax, including an estimated 1,500 of the companies dealt with by the Barnsley and Doncaster tax offices. Other taxpaying companies trading in the Barnsley and Doncaster areas will also benefit.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the number of people liable for CGT and (b) the total revenue raised if the individual allowance threshold was raised to (i) £10,000, (ii) £13,600 and (iii) £20,000. [R] [74064]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 1999]: The March 1999 Budget proposes an Annual Exempt Amount of £7,100 for the tax year 1999–2000, at which level it is projected that 200,000 taxpayers will have capital gains tax liabilities of £3.6 billion. These estimates exclude companies as their capital gains are charged to corporation tax. The effect of raising the Annual Exempt Amount to the specified levels is shown in the table.

	Change to
Annual Exempt Amount	Number of taxpayers (thousand)	Capital gains tax liabilities [1] (£ million)
£10,000	−55	−90
£13,600	−90	−180
£20,000	−125	−310

[1] These estimates take into account the likely effect on capital gains tax yield of changes to volume of disposals in the year brought about by changes to taxpayer behaviour

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of CGT revenue which will be collected in respect of the financial year 1998–99; and what will be the cost of collection. [R] [74062]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 1999]: The latest available information is given in the table. Information on the cost of collecting Capital Gains Tax in 1998–99 is not available.

Capital Gains Tax

£ million

Year	Net receipts [1]	Cost of collection [2]
1997–98	1,453	33.4
1998–99	[3]2,400	[4]—

[1] Excludes tax on gains of companies which are charged to Corporation Tax

[2] Relates mainly to the costs arising from gains to individuals and trustees but some other costs (mainly of land valuations for companies) cannot be separately identified and are included in the collection costs of capital gains tax

Stamp Duty (Shares)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his European colleagues about rates of stamp duty on shares in other EU states. [R] [74061]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 2 March 1999]: My right hon. Friend has frequent discussions with his EU counterparts covering a wide range of matters.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue (i) collected in financial years (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98 and (ii) projected for 1998–99 in respect of stamp duty on shares; and what was the cost of collection. [R] [74065]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 2 March 1999]: The figures are as follows:

Stamp duty (including stamp duty reserve tax) on transactions of shares and other securities

£ million

Year	Net receipts	Cost of collection
1996–97	1,408	1.0
1997–98	1,960	1.4
1998–99 (provisional estimate)	2,600	1.4

Premium Bonds

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the maximum allowed holding of Premium Bonds in each year since 1969. [75944]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 March 1999]: The maximum holding of Premium Bonds in 1969 was £1,250. Since then it has been increased as follows:

1 April 1971	2,000
11 September 1978	3,000
21 April 1980	10,000
13 April 1993	20,000

Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the role of professional lobbyists in formulating policy in his Department. [74367]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 4 March 1999]: Any contacts with lobbyists by Ministers and civil servants in this Department are conducted in accordance with the "Ministerial Code" and "Guidance for Civil Servants: Contact with Lobbyists."

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to publish the paper "Fiscal Policy: Public Finances and the Cycle", referred to in the November 1998 Pre-Budget report (Cm 4076), paragraph B24; and if he will make a statement. [75353]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 8 March 1999]: The paper "Fiscal Policy: Public Finances and the Cycle" was published with other documentation on Budget day, 9 March 1999.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72014]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The services carried out by KPMG for HM Treasury during the periods requested are as follows:

Services provided since 1 May 1997

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of insurance policies which will be taxed at the new rate of insurance premium tax announced in his 1999 Budget. [76453]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 March 1999]: No estimate is available of the number of policies affected.

714 Certificates

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of current holders of a 714 certificate who will not be eligible to hold a tax certificate under the Construction Industry scheme. [74157]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 1999]: We believe that around 200,000 subcontractors currently holding 714 certificates are unlikely to qualify for gross payment certificates under the Construction Industry Scheme as a result of the new turnover test.

Pensions (Taxation)

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the Ministers in his Department has responsibility for policy towards the taxation regime for pensions. [75004]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 8 March 1999]: Decisions on taxation are taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

European Central Bank

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his European partners on increasing the democratic accountability of the European Central Bank. [74878]

Ms Hewitt: Article 109b(3) of the Maastricht Treaty contains several provisions designed to balance the necessary independence of the European Central Bank with the need for democratic accountability.

The Government believe that accountability and transparency in policy/making will be key to ensuring that the European Central Bank gains the trust of the European public and financial markets. Ultimately, it will help to provide the credibility needed to deliver a more effective monetary policy.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) the European central bank and (b) other Community bodies can prevent the accession of a member state on

EMU-related grounds where that prospective member state has declined to negotiate an opt-out from full economic and monetary union acquis. [74441]

Ms Hewitt: According to Article O of the Treaty on European Union, applications for membership of the Union are considered by the Council of Ministers, after consulting the Commission, and after receiving the assent of the European Parliament. The conditions of admission are then for agreement between Member States and the applicant state.

Exchange Rate (Euro)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he will use to decide the appropriate exchange rate for the pound against the euro for the United Kingdom's entry into the monetary union; and what is his strategy for (a) achieving and (b) maintaining that rate. [74877]

Ms Hewitt: The rate at which sterling would enter the single currency would need to be consistent with economic fundamentals in the UK and compatible with sustainable convergence between the UK and the euro-area. This was the basis for the decision on the conversion rates of currencies which joined in the first wave.

The Government's policy is for a stable and competitive exchange-rate over the medium term. The Government's fiscal and monetary policy framework will help to deliver the macroeconomic stability needed for a stable exchange rate.

Stability Programme

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the Options on the Stability Programme of the UK, agreed in the ECOFIN Council of 8 February. [75052]

Ms Hewitt: The Government accept in principle the case for reform of the Trustee Investments Act 1961. But any reform must provide a complete and lasting solution, which is not likely to be achieved without primary legislation. The Government are committed to reform in a number of areas and already have a full programme of legislation implementing their key policy priorities. The Government will keep the position under review and seek to make progress at the earliest opportunity.

Income Taxpayers (Scotland)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of income taxpayers in Scotland. [75508]

"At the time I became a Minister I stated in the press statement I issued that while all my shares in J. Sainsbury plc would be placed in a blind trust, the size of my shareholding in the Company meant that it was likely that I would retain a beneficial interest in the Company via the blind trust. I therefore said that I would stand aside from decisions or discussions having any specific effect on the company."

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76173]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The original electronic red box was essentially a laptop computer built into the traditional red box casing. It provided a useful symbol and demonstration to raise the profile of information-age government.

Experimentation with this device showed its useful facility was the secure connection that allowed non-sensitive documents and information to be emailed between the Private Office and the Minister. However, development of the Government Secure Intranet and other research, is examining alternative ways to provide this capacity.

Ms Hewitt: At the Annual Meeting of the IMF/World Bank in the autumn, the UK secured agreement to a comprehensive review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative, to take place in 1999.

G8 Meeting, Cologne

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to propose common standards for export credit agreements at the Cologne G8 meeting in June. [77080]

Mrs. Roche: Considerable work continues to be undertaken within the OECD to ensure that export credit agencies operate on the basis of a level playing field. The imminent introduction on 1 April this year of the OECD premia regime is the latest example of this work. The G8 recognises that the OECD is often the appropriate forum for export credit issues and for this reason has in the past encourage the OECD to seek a common standard on several export credit matters, including the environment and productive expenditure for highly indebted poor countries. We will continue within the G8 to support the work of the OECD Export Credits Group towards developing common standards for export credit agencies.

Police Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contracts the Metropolitan Police have entered into with Higgins Developments Ltd., for the building or refurbishment of police stations; and for what value. [76632]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that neither the Metropolitan Police Service nor the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District has entered into a contract with Higgins Development Ltd. After competition, undertaken by external consultants, the Receiver has entered into a contract with Higgins Homes Ltd., a subsidiary company of Higgins Group plc, for the purchase of the site at 28–30 High Street Wanstead, subject to planning permission and a time constraint.

Since 1985, another subsidiary company of Higgins Group plc, D. Higgins & Sons Ltd. has been invited by the Receiver to tender, in competition, 36 times, and won four contracts as a result. Those were:

Contract	Type of work	Date let	Contract sum (£)
Borehamwood Police Station	Alteration and refurbishment	9 August 1990	454,000
Canadian Avenue, Catford	Conversion of premises to a probation hostel	6 March 1991	469,000
Archway	Fitting out sector base	8 January 1998	282,000
Lambeth	Alterations for territorial support group	12 November 1998	330,000

Car Crime

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Metropolitan Police are taking to reduce car crime at leisure facilities. [76633]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that his objective is to reduce all vehicle crime within the Metropolitan Police District by 10,000 offences in 1999–2000. This is the equivalent of a four per cent. reduction over 1998–1999. The Metropolitan Police tackle vehicle crime through an intelligence-led approach. They use the result of crime audits, conducted with Crime and Disorder Act partners, and analysis of reported crimes, to identify 'hot spots' on which to focus policing activity.

The Commission informs me that information about vehicle crime is not collated according to the types of car park where offences are committed. The Metropolitan Police are, however, contributing to the Association of Chief Police Officers secured car parks scheme by working with local authorities to increase the number of secured car parks in the Metropolitan Police District from 41 to 450 by the year 2000.

Immigration and Asylum Appeals

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications there were for (i) extension or variation of leave to remain and (ii) duplicate endorsements for the last full year for which figures are available. [76616]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Mr. Norman) on 1 March 1999, Official Report, column 563.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76835]

Mr. Straw: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, my Special Advisers have made visits overseas on three occasions in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Codes and the Civil Service Management Code.

Company Licences

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) small and medium-sized enterprises and (b) larger companies (i) all licences and permits issued by his Department and its agencies to companies permitting them to carry out their business, (ii) the cost of each such licence or permit in (A) 1997–98 and (B) 1999–2000 and (iii) the current number of companies which are in receipt of each such licence or permit. [76851]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The information requested is not collected centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Human Rights

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's response to the findings announced by the European Commission on Human Rights regarding the applications by T and V about their trial and subsequent sentence of detention at Her Majesty's Pleasure for murder. [77571]

Mr. Straw: In summary, the findings of the European Commission on Human Rights were as follows:

On Article 3 ('Production of torture') the Commission found no violation in relation to the trial.

On Article 6(1) ('Right to a fair trial') the Commission found violation by 14 votes to 5 in relation to the trial.

On Article 14 ('Prohibition of discrimination') the Commission found no separate issue because of the violation on Article 6 above.

On Article 3 the Commission found no violation in relation to the sentence.

On Article 5(1) ('Right to liberty and security') the Commission found no violation in relation to the sentence.

On Article 6(1) the Commission found violation by 18 votes to 1 in relation to the tariff.

On Article 5(4) the Commission found violation by 18 votes to 1 in relation to the tariff and review of detention.

The Government welcome the fact that the Commission found that neither the trial nor the sentencing process were in violation of Article 3 of the European Convention which deals with inhuman and degrading treatment.

The areas where the Commission did find against the United Kingdom Government do raise a range of serious and quite complex issues. The Government have decided to refer the Commission's finding themselves to the European Court of Human Rights. The European Commission has also referred these matters to the European Court.

The European Court of Human Rights will now rehear all the issues covered by the Commission. This will give the Government an opportunity to state their position on all these issues. The Government will continue to contest these applications very strongly.

I have placed a copy of the Commission's findings in the Library.

Firearms (Compensation)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to pay compensation to Mr. R. L. Wickerson of 35 Hillside Road, Paignton, Devon TQ3 3JF (ref DVC/FAC51086E187421) for the surrender of his firearms on 26 February 1998. [76793]

Mr. Boateng: The Option A and B elements of the claim were paid on 18 November 1998, and an offer of payment following examination of the remaining Option C elements of the claim was issued on 8 March 1999. This final payment will be made as soon as the necessary disclaimer has been returned.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Nuclear Materials (Transportation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the emission levels from rail-borne flasks carrying nuclear fuel in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the international safety levels set for the transport by rail of nuclear fuels. [76014]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The National Radiological Protection Board, working under contract to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions carried out surveys into the radiological impact of the transport of radioactive materials by all modes. In the last survey covering rail transport (Radiation Exposure from the Normal Transport of Radioactive Materials within the United Kingdom, 1991 Review, by R. Gelder, National Radiological Protection Board Report NRPB-R255, ISBN 0 85951 351 3) the scenario of a householder living 100 metres from a marshalling yard where fuel flasks may be held for several hours, was assessed to give rise to a maximum dose of 6 microSievert. The maximum dose to persons living closer (50 metres) to a railway line with passing traffic (where exposure times would be very much shorter) was assessed to be very much lower. For comparison, the average annual dose in the UK owing to natural background radiation is about 2000 microSievert.

The international safety levels for the transport of radioactive materials by rail are in the Regulations concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail (RID) (ISBN 0–11–552032–5). They require that the radiation level from trains carrying radioactive material during normal operations is limited to a maximum of 2 milliSievert/h at any point on the wagon outer surfaces, or the vertical planes projected from the outer edges of open wagons and to 0.1 milliSievert/h at a distance of 2 metres from those surfaces. The maximum levels for non-fixed contamination on the surface of fuel flasks or rail wagons is 4 Bequerels/cm^2 for beta, gamma and low toxicity alpha emitters and 0.4 Bequerels/cm^2 for alpha emitters.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport announced a programme of random independent inspections of contamination levels on spent fuel flasks and other packages transporting radioactive materials. These checks were additional to those already made by the operators. The contamination survey report is due to be published shortly. Copies will be available in the House of Commons Library.

Affordable Accommodation (London)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many units of accommodation available at affordable rents were developed by regional housing associations in (i) the London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham, (ii) the London Borough of Wandsworth and (iii) the City of Westminster in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [76282]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of units of affordable accommodation completed by registered social landlords in the financial year of 1997–98 and in the first 11 months of 1998–99 are as follows:

	1997–98	1998–99
Hammersmith and Fulham	291	163
Wandsworth	74	60
Westminster	176	158

Note:
The information is not available by calendar year.

Road Traffic (North West)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to control the levels of road traffic resulting from summer tourism in the North West of England. [76358]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The road traffic problem caused by summer tourism in the North West is highly localised in nature and is primarily a matter for the local highway authorities concerned. Officials from my Department have been working with key partners in Cumbria to enhance and accelerate the existing Lake District Transport Package which has received TPP funding since 1998. The resultant Transport Strategy will act as a pilot for other National Parks.

The strategy, among other things, aims to reduce traffic and offer alternative modes of transport to the car while maintaining a sustainable tourist industry. We anticipate this strategy will be developed further and subsumed into Cumbria County Council's Local Transport Plan to be submitted later this year.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76179]

Dr. Reid: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 651–52.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) revenue support grant and (b) standard spending assessment for each (i) metropolitan and (ii) unitary authority as a sum per head of their population ranked and numbered in descending order. [76165]

Ms Armstrong: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he has put into place to speed up the planning process for major infrastructure projects. [76396]

Mr. Caborn: Some proposals for improving the processing of major infrastructure projects through the planning system were included in the "Modernising Planning" Policy Statement which I published last year. I intend to publish shortly a consultation paper with detailed proposals to streamline the procedures.

Student Travel Discounts

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that all students are granted the same concessions in terms of travel discounts; and what representations he has received relating to this. [76747]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for local authorities, under the statutory powers available to them. Bus operators and London Transport may also offer reduced fares for students if they think it appropriate. I receive correspondence on this topic from time to time, but have no plans to change the present arrangements.

British Waterways

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources he plans to make available to British Waterways to repair the existing canal system. [76644]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 18 February an increase in grant to British Waterways, by £8 million to nearly £59 million a year. Over the next three years this will enable British Waterways to increase the amount of investment and reduce the backlog of urgent maintenance from £90 million to £40 million.

Rural Bypasses

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to provide funding for further rural bypass schemes; and if he will make a statement. [76774]

Dr. Reid: Nineteen trunk road bypasses were among the 37 schemes included in the Targeted Programme of Improvements announced last July following the Roads Review. Further cases will be considered in the studies proposed in the Review.

Local Authorities may propose bypasses as part of their Local Transport Plans where they are satisfied that they represent the most appropriate solution to the problem and deserve priority within their Plan.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he or one of his Ministers will visit Wyre Piddle to examine the case for the construction of a bypass. [76775]

Dr. Reid: We will examine the case for the construction of Wyre Piddle Bypass in the context of Worcestershire County Council's Draft Local Transport Plan, to be submitted in July this year. Any visit in advance of that consideration would be premature.

London Underground

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the planned fare increases for London Underground for the years 2000–05. [76972]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground fares are currently the responsibility of London Transport. Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, when London Underground transfers to the Greater London Authority, the Mayor will be under a duty to arrange for the setting of the general level and structure of fares to be charged on services provided or secured by Transport for London, including London Underground fares. We are currently working on the detail of arrangements for setting Underground fares in the transition period after the establishment of the GLA and before London Underground is transferred to it.

Planning Guidance (Electromagnetic Fields)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to issue planning guidance on land use planning and electromagnetic fields. [77083]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department issued in December 1998 for consultation the draft of a circular prepared jointly with the Department of Health on land use planning and electromagnetic fields (EMFs). The circular provides advice to local planning authorities in drawing up development plan policies or deciding planning applications for development giving rise to EMFs or for development proposed in the vicinity of existing sources of EMFs. A copy of the consultation package has been placed in the Library. Responses were invited by 19 February 1999. We are currently considering the responses received.

Countryside Access

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compatibility between his proposals to extend the right of access on foot to open countryside without compensation and the Government's obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights. [76969]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's view is that their plans for creating a new statutory right on foot to open countryside are compatible with their obligations under the European Convention on human rights. In deciding that there will be no general right to compensation, the Government have taken into account the limited nature of the new right of access; its application only to land which is undeveloped and not used for intensive agricultural purposes; the continued ability of landowners to develop and use their land after the introduction of the right; and the extensive provision made for closure of land for land management and other reasons. A cost benefit study for the Government, undertaken by independent consultants, supports the view that landowners will not suffer significant losses or costs as a result of a new right of access such as would warrant the provision of compensation.

Housing Revenue Account (Subsidy System)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding the amount of housing benefit subsidy clawed back through negative entitlement under the housing revenue account subsidy formula. [76978]

Mr. Raynsford: A number of right hon. and hon. Members, local authorities, and tenants groups have made representations about the present Housing Revenue Account Subsidy system. In December 1998 we issued a consultation paper "A New Financial Framework for Local Authority Housing: Resource Accounting in the Housing Revenue Account" seeking views on proposals for fundamental changes in the system. These changes would include ending the practice of offsetting assumed surpluses on an Authority's Housing Revenue Account against rent rebate subsidy. Consultations are not yet complete and there will be an announcement about our plans in due course. A copy of the consultation paper is in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many civil servants in her Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in her Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76805]

Clare Short: No civil servants in my Department have been asked to waive their rights. Employers of the Department are highly dedicated to the work and inclined to work long hours. We have decided to tackle instances of work overload through measures such as job re-structuring and work re-prioritisation rather than by the continuing acceptance of a long hours culture. Managers at all levels have been asked to ensure that staff are not put under pressure to work hours in excess of those permitted by the Directive or to waive their rights. The costs of compliance with the Directive cannot be collected as they are not clearly evident.

Nigeria

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to ease the debt burden for Nigeria. [76965]

Clare Short: The full extent of Nigeria's debt is unclear. My Department is providing technical assistance to the Government to update its external debt recording and management system. We have also offered to assist the Government to develop a debt management strategy.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many times Ministers in her Department have met their counterparts in the US Government since 1 June 1998; and if she will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the ministers involved on each occasion, and the name of the US counterpart at each meeting. [77120]

Clare Short: I have no counterpart in the US Government. I have met Brian Atwood—head of USAID on a large number of occasions.

HEALTH

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each of the last 10 years, how many patients have waited (a) three to 25 weeks and (b) more than 26 weeks to see a consultant in each (i) health authority and (ii) English region. [74732]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available.

Information on outpatient waiting times by health authority is only available from 1998–99. Available information for the quarter ending December 1998 is provided in the table.

Paediatric Services

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department is providing to health authorities on the provision of paediatric occupational therapy services; and if he will make a statement. [74875]

Mr. Hutton: Guidance on the provision of paediatric occupational therapy services is contained in "Child Health in the Community—A Guide to Good Practice", published in 1996. We expect that Primary Care Groups will work with their local Health Authorities to ensure that Health Improvement Programmes will include adequate occupational therapy services for children.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much income the Medicines Control Agency derives from licensing fees. [75727]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency receives almost all its income from licensing and associated fees. The balance of its income derives from charges for associated services for which statutory fees are not levied.

In 1997–98, the Medicines Control Agency received in excess of 97 per cent. (£27.4 million out of £28.1 million) of its income from licensing-related fees. Further information can be obtained from the agency's annual report and accounts.

Health Services Accreditation

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if (a) his Department, (b) the NHS Executive and (c) East Sussex, Brighton and Hove Health Authority informed customers of the closure of Health Services Accreditation; and if he will make a statement on the (i) nature and (ii) number of responses received. [76355]

Mr. Denham: The Director of Health Service Accreditation (HSA) wrote on 3 March 1999 advising customers of its closure. As of 16 March, HSA had received a total of 14 letters from contributors to the service standards reports or from providers of patient services eligible for accreditation. They all expressed regret that the work of the HSA had come to an end and all hoped that ways might be found of maintaining access to the materials.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic red boxes. [76170]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has made a laptop computer available to each Minister to enable them to e-mail non-sensitive documents securely to and from their Private Office and access other departmental information sources. I currently use this facility as does the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham).

Home Help Charges

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the weekly charges to clients who are in receipt of a home help service in the (a) City of Westminster, (b) London Borough of Wandsworth and (c) London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham. [76267]

Mr. Hutton: Information on charges made to individuals for home help provision is not available centrally. However, the total amounts reported by local authorities as having been received from clients in the form of fees and charges, in 1996–97, for different services are collected centrally, and are available on the Department of Health Web page [http:\\www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/pss__stat.htm] for all local authorities in England.

Viagra

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the extended period of public consultation on the provision of Viagra by the NHS will come to a conclusion. [76746]

Mr. Denham: The public consultation on our policy proposals about the treatment of impotence on the National Health Service will end on 25 March 1999.

Pen Needles

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to issue free pen needles for use by insulin-dependent diabetics. [76881]

Mr. Denham: I announced on 25 February that we hope to allow insulin pen needles and reusable insulin injection pens to be prescribed by general practitioners on the National Health Service. This would be contingent upon the addition of pre-filled, disposable pens to Schedule 10 to the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992 on which we are consulting interested parties. Copies of this announcement and the consultation letter have been placed in the Library.

The consultation period ends on 9 April 1999.

Nurses

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many former nurses (i) in total and (ii) who had been out of the profession for more than five years have (a) applied and (b) been accepted on back to nursing courses since his January announcement. [76387]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The information requested is not available centrally.

In the first few weeks of the national nursing publicity campaign, which began on 1 February, over 44,500 people have contacted the response line, of which about 4,400 have expressed an interest in returning to nursing in the National Health Service.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many former nurses have (i) applied, (ii) been accepted upon and (iii) completed back to nursing courses in each of the last five years; [76385]

(2) what was the average cost of back to nursing courses for former nurses who have been out of the profession for (a) less than five years and (b) more than five years, for each of the last five years on record; [76388]

(3) how many former nurses have applied for back to nursing courses for each of the last five years; [76384]

(4) how many former nurses who had left nursing at least five years previously have (i) applied to, (ii) been accepted on and (iii) completed back to nursing courses in each of the last five years. [76386]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The information requested is not available centrally.

It is planned to include information about return to practice courses in the statistical bulletin which is due to be published by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting during week commencing 19 April 1999.

Dental Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the development of community dental services. [75436]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The Community Dental Service plays a valuable part in the provision of NHS dentistry, which we plan to continue. The type and level of CDS services commissioned and funded is for individual health authorities to determine in the light of local needs and priorities.

Official Journal (EC)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each management consultancy contract advertised by NHS organisations in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Community in each of the last five years. [76489]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on contract notices placed in the supplement is available on the internet website "http://www.ted.eur-op.eu.int".

Mobile Phones

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into the possible link between heavy use of mobile phones and memory loss. [76951]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has funded two research projects on possible effects of radio frequency fields similar to those emitted by mobile phones. One is a behavioural study of rodents and the other is a human study involving psychological tests under simulated mobile phone use. Memory loss is a component of both these studies. Neither study has yet been published.

Women's Unit

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of the Women's Unit. [75375]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes) on 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 669.

Aspirin

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to end the present regulation limiting the sale of 75mg. aspirin to 32 tablets at one time. [77437]

Mr. Denham: Following statutory public consultation, the Medicines Commission has advised that low dose aspirin (75mg) may safely be sold or supplied in packs of up to 100 tablets or capsules under the supervision of a pharmacist. The Prescription Only Medicines Order will be amended to implement this. The Statutory Instrument is due to be laid in Parliament by 1 April and, with Parliamentary agreement, would be effective from 22 April 1999.

WALES

Roads

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of expenditure by his Department and agencies on roads for each of the years from 1994–95 to 1998–99; what are the planned figures for each of the years from 1999–2000 to 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [74899]

Mr. Hain: My Department's expenditure on trunk roads was as follows:

	£ million
Outturn
1994–95	202.1
1995–96	192.3
1996–97	162.0
1997–98	112.9
Plans
1998–99	100.6

Trunk road provision for future years is:

	£ million
Plans
1999–2000	101.6
2000–2001	104.6
2001–2002	104.6

This Government have stuck by the spending plans of the previous Government up to and including those for the current financial year (1998–99). However, we were able, exceptionally, to inject an extra £10 million into the trunk road programme in 1998–99, and this will be reflected in final outturn figures.

The Department also supports local authority expenditure on major road construction schemes through Transport Grant arrangements. Transport Grant allocations for road schemes in the period in question were as follows:

	£ million
Outturn
1994–95	65.6
1995–96	83.0
1996–97	79.4
1997–98	48.5
Plans
1999–2000	25.3

From 1998–99 the Department has used Transport Grant to support integrated transport packages and Safe Route to School initiatives. Allocations of £12 million have been made for these purposes for 1999–2000, which are additional to the provision above. Future Transport allocations for local roads will depend on bids received this Summer and subsequently.

There are other elements of Welsh Office programme expenditure which relate to roads but these are not easily identifiable.

Following the transfer of functions the allocation of expenditure for roads will be a matter for the National Assembly.

European Standard Fund

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the annual amount received in Wales from European structural funds between 1992 and 1999; and what percentage these amounts were of the total receipts received under European structural funds within the United Kingdom. [75856]

Mr. Hain: The information is not available in the format requested since Structural Fund programmes run over a period of years. For the period covered by the present regulations (1994–99), Wales has been allocated £640 million from the Structural Funds, which represents 7 per cent. of the total United Kingdom allocation.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76169]

Mr. Michael: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, on 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 651–52. Preparations are being made to ensure that Assembly Secretaries and Members are at the cutting edge of new technologies.

Schools Census

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the results of the January 1999 schools' census will be published. [76212]

Mr. Hain: Schools Census results will be available later this year and will be published in "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools in 2000". Provisional results about class sizes will be published in a Statistical Release in the summer. The precise date of publication will be announced in the Office for National Statistics' monthly "National Statistics Update" in due course.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

SCOTLAND

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what finance has been provided in the Comprehensive Spending Review for increases in nurses' pay in Scotland in 2000–01 and 2001–02. [69716]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: While no specific funds have been provided for nurses' pay in the Comprehensive Spending Review, the outcome provided sufficient funds to meet the reasonable cost of future nurses' pay awards.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Secondhand Tyres

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase the resources available to council trading standards departments to enable them (a) to enforce rules relating to the sale of unsafe secondhand tyres and (b) to publicise the dangers of low-quality secondhand tyres. [75614]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

We took into account pressures on local authorities, and their ability to make efficiency savings, when setting the level of provision in the Comprehensive Spending Review and in reaching conclusions on the Local Government Finance Settlement 1999–2000. We also took into account the views of the local government associations and others who we consulted during consultation on our proposals. The level of resources devoted to the enforcement of the Motor Vehicles Tyres (Safety) Regulations 1994, which seek to control the quality of part worn tyres, is a matter for each local authority responsible for trading standards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to Turkey about the principles of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly on the legal rights of a person charged with an offence. [74621]

Ms Quin: We regularly raise with Turkey the importance we attach to Turkey meeting its obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights, including the right of a person charged with an offence to a fair trial and to legal counsel of his choice.

With EU partners we most recently raised this issue with Turkey on 22 February.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he intends to respond to the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in respect of the rights of citizens of Gibraltar to vote in elections of the European Parliament. [76637]

Ms Quin: We will be taking all available steps to secure extension of the EP franchise to Gibraltar, in the light of the decision of the European Court of Human Rights. However, this can be done only by amending the 1976 EC Act on Direct Elections. This will require the agreement of all Member States. HMG will seek such an amendment in the current negotiations in Brussels on establishing Common Principles for EP elections.

Iraq (Oil)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what röle United Nations forces have in the prevention of export of oil from Iraq; [76933]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of barrels of oil, and the value in US dollars, exported illegally each year from Iraq to each first destination; [76934]

(3) if he will make a statement on the illegal export of oil by road from Iraq. [76932]

Mr. Fatchett: No UN forces are specifically assigned to preventing the export of oil from Iraq. It is for individual member states to implement UN sanctions. A Multinational Interdiction Force, to which the UK regularly contributes maritime assets, patrols the Gulf to reduce the volume of illegal trade with Iraq, particularly oil, the most lucrative source of income for the Iraqi regime. We regularly make representations to Iraq's neighbours on the importance of preventing such a trade.

HMG estimates that illegal exports of refined oil products via the Gulf since 1995 are as follows:

1995: 20,000 metric tonnes, valued at $2 million (one metric tonne is equivalent to 7.33 barrels).

1996: 264,585 tonnes valued at $30 million.

1997: 1,550,692 tonnes valued at $100–130 million.

1998: 1,929,260 tonnes valued at least at $100 million.

1999: approx 37,000 tonnes for January and February.

Illegal exports of refined products via Turkey are:

1995: valued at $20 million.

1996: approx 710,000 tonnes valued at $22–50 million.

1997: valued at $70–150 million.

1998: possibly between 1.7–10.4 million tonnes over the year, estimated at a value of approximately $300 million.

Illegal oil exports via Syria, probably both crude oil and diesel, started in the second half of 1998. HMG cannot assess the quantity or value.

Kosovo

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's response to Russian objections to Chapters 2 and 7 of the Rambouillet text. [77156]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The draft interim political agreement on Kosovo remains the subject of negotiation at the current peace talks in Paris. It would not therefore be helpful to comment on specific aspects of the agreement, or on the views of individual Contact Group members, at this critical stage.

Nigeria

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Nigeria. [76979]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome the progress of Nigeria's transition programme back to civilian democratic rule. While international observers noted some irregularities and logistical difficulties in the recent elections, they have commented that these did not affect the overall result, which we judge was a genuine reflection of the will of the Nigerian people. During his recent visit to Nigeria, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs congratulated President-elect Obasanjo on his victory. We hope that he will be able to visit the United Kingdom soon.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his meeting with President-elect Obasanjo. [76980]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary met President-elect Obasanjo in Nigeria on 10 March. The Foreign Secretary congratulated the President-elect on his election victory and highlighted the efforts Britain was making to help the transition process. The Foreign Secretary announced Britain's new pledge of £750,000 to help prepare the military for their role under a democratic government. My right hon. Friend reaffirmed that the United Kingdom would continue to support Nigeria's efforts to consolidate lasting democracy and prosperity. We would urge our partners in the Commonwealth to lift Nigeria's suspension immediately.

Other topics discussed included Nigeria's economy and future support for the democratically elected government in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that Nigeria returns to full membership of the Commonwealth. [76981]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom supports Nigeria's early return to the Commonwealth. The decision lies with Commonwealth Heads of Government. This matter will be discussed by the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group, at their next meeting on 29–30 April.

Dubai

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, column 229, what representations he plans to make to the Government of Dubai regarding its failure to answer his Note Verbale of 10 November 1998. [76946]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Our Embassy in Dubai has today asked the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Dubai when we might expect a reply to the Note Verbale of 10 November 1998.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many export licences have been granted for arms exports to Sri Lanka since 2 May 1997; when the last licence was granted; and what it was for. [75510]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 2 May 1997 and 25 February 1999, 106 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 12 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Sri Lanka of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings (and OIELs may also cover a range of countries).

Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

Individual licences issued between 2 May 1997 and 25 February 1999 covering the export to Sri Lanka of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of SIELs issued covering goods with this rating	Number of OIELs issued covering goods with this rating
ML3	11	0
ML4	14	1
ML5	2	0
ML6	2	0
ML7	2	0
ML10	3	4
ML11	33	5
ML14	1	0
ML15	3	1
ML21	2	0
PL5001	1	0
PL5017	3	0

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Sri Lanka under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

The date on which the last of the above licences was issued during the period was 18 February 1999, and this licence, a SIEL, covered the export of goods with the rating ML3.

As noted in the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149, details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted will be published in the Government's annual reports on strategic export controls and their application.

DEFENCE

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has had with Hunting-Brae since the Environment Agency served an enforcement notice on AWE Aldermaston, concerning the presence of tritium from the establishment in the Aldermaston stream; and if he will make a statement; [76021]

(2) if he will make a statement on the enforcement notice served on AWE Aldermaston by the Environment Agency following the alleged illegal discharge of tritium into the River Kennet. [76022]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of Hunting-BRAE Ltd. made the MOD aware of the Environment Agency's intention to serve an enforcement notice on AWE Aldermaston in early February.

An enforcement notice was duly served by the Environment Agency on 9 February 1999, requiring Hunting-BRAE to provide information to the Agency on discharges of tritium into the Aldermaston stream, and to make proposals to bring the discharges under regulatory control.

The Environment Agency has declared that, because the levels of radioactivity are not a danger to human health or the environment, it has decided not to stop the discharges. It also stated that the radiation dose from tritium in this groundwater at the point of entry into the Aldermaston stream is about 100 times less than the annual European radiation dose limit and 200 times less than natural background radiation. The stream flows into the River Kennet. I understand that samples taken downstream at Padworth bridge indicate that by that point, the levels are close to the limits of detection.

Defence Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the joint defence projects under development which involve members of the European Union. [76264]

Mr. Spellar: The joint defence projects under development involving the UK and other members of the European Union is as shown in the table. It does not include equipment that is either in-service or in production unless there is development activity proceeding in parallel.

Nimrod MRA4 Programme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current (a) estimated cost and (b) in-service date of the Nimrod MRA4 programme; and what each was when the contract was placed. [76645]

Mr. Spellar: The current estimated cost of procurement of Nimrod MRA4 is £2.4 billion (at September 1998 economic conditions), an increase of 0.5 per cent. since the contract was placed in December 1996. When the contract was placed, BAe undertook to meet an ISD of April 2003. Resource and technical difficulties with the early phases of the programme at BAe mean that the company does not now expect the aircraft to enter service with the RAF before early 2005. The precise slippage is still the subject of negotiations between MOD and BAe.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of work for the Nimrod MRA4 programme is being placed with UK registered companies; and what was the forecast workshare when the contract was placed. [76627]

Mr. Spellar: When the Nimrod MRA4 contract was placed in December 1996, the direct workshare for UK companies was estimated at 76 per cent. I will write further once we have been able to calculate the current position and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Specialist Procurement Services

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Specialist Procurement Services; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Specialist Procurement Services published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76875]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Specialist Procurement Services. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from N. J. Bennett to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 17 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Specialist Procurement Services' staffing levels and Annual Report as these matters fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Specialist Procurement Services.

As at 16 March 1999 there were 802 employees funded by Specialist Procurement Services. At its inception the Agency employed 832 persons. The minor reduction in numbers since Agency inception reflects the beginning of a longer-term plan to maintain numbers in line with reduced operating cost targets. These changes are leading to initiatives to adopt new working practices in all of the Agency's operating divisions to minimise the impact on business delivery.

In accordance with NAO Agency Audit requirements the Specialist Procurement Services Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 was placed in the Library on 20th July 1998. The production cost for the report was £12,800.

Disposal Sales Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Disposal Sales Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76891]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Malcolm Westgate to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 17 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Disposal Sales Agency's (DSA) 1997–98 Annual Report as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

The Report was laid before Parliament on 29 July 1998 and published on 25 August 1998. The cost of production and printing totalled £9,744.60.

I hope this answers your question.

Service Children's Education Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Service Children's Education Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Service Children's Education Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76877]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Service Children's Education Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David G. Wadsworth to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 17 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Service Children's Education Agency as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Exeeutive of the Agency.

Service Children's Education was created as a Defence Agency in April 1996. At that time there were 2,620 employees, broke down as 690 United Kingdom Based Teachers (UKBT), 180 locally engaged teachers (LET), 1,600 locally engaged civilians (LEC) and 150 Headquarters and support unit staff (HQ). There are currently 2,459 SCE personnel; 644 UKBTs, 177 UK Paid Teachers (UKPT), 1,517 LECs and 121 Headquarters and support unit staff, which includes Specialist Educational grades, MOD Defence Administration grades, LECs and 1 Military Warrant Officer—a total reduction of some 161 personnel. It should be noted that, since September 1998, SCE has taken on responsibility for the provision of four-year-old nursery education, with around 150 staff in 35 pre-schools worldwide; we also 'lost' catering and cleaning staff as a result of market testing with the result that the figure of 161 represents a 'net' reduction in numbers.

The Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 were laid before the House on 30 July 1998. The publication costs of the Report were £3,810. This figure does not include the costs of staff involved in producing the Report, despatch and associated costs, which would be in the region of £15,000. In addition there is a notional charge by the National Audit Office for the auditing of the Accounts of £39,000.

Defence Communication Services Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Communication Services Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Defence Communication Services Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76899]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Communication Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Major General A. J. Raper to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 17 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Defence Communication Services Agency, as this matter falls within my remit as its Chief Executive. You asked about the number of people currently employed, the number at its inception, the date the Agency published its report for Financial Year 1997–98 and the cost of producing it.

The number of people currently employed in the Defence Communication Services Agency is 1,379 against 1,517 at its inception on 1 April 1998. On the matter of 1997–98 report you will appreciate that, as the Agency only formed on 1 April 1998, no such report was due. There was, consequently, no cost.

Duke of York's Royal Military School

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Duke of York's Royal Military School; and what was the figure at its inception. [76890]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Duke of York's Royal Military School. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. H. Wilson to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 17 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people currently employed by the Duke of York's Royal Military School and the figure at its inception, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of this Agency.

There are currently 108 people employed by the Duke of York's Royal Military School, 90 of whom are full time and 18 of whom are part-time. The school was founded in Chelsea in 1803 and regrettably we do not have records of staff numbers at that time.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants in his Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in his Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76811]

Mr. Spellar: Details of staff who have voluntarily agreed that the maximum 48 hour working week need not apply in their case are not held centrally and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Department has issued guidance that such opt-outs should be agreed by line managers only in exceptional circumstances. The vast majority of staff will therefore be unaffected by this aspect of the regulations. As normal working hours for MOD civil servants are well within the 48 hour ceiling, the costs of compliance with the Directive are negligible.

Sexual Harassment

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel have claimed sexual harassment against his Department at industrial tribunals; at what cost, in each year since 1994; and how many of those actions were successful. [76957]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested relating to the number of Industrial (now Employment) Tribunal applications made by serving members, or former members, of the Armed Forces, together with details of compensation paid in each financial year since 1994–95 is set out.

	Number of Industrial Tribunal applications received in period	Number of Industrial Tribunal cases paid in period	Compensation paid in period (£)
1996–97	16	4	76,500
1997–98	11	5	173,614

Procurement Board

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Procurement Board has met since 1 January 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of these meetings. [77150]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1 January 1998, the Procurement Policy Board (PPB) met on 28 January, 20 April, 15 July, 23 November and 25 January 1999. The major items discussed during these meetings are as follows:

Acquisition Organisation Review

SDR Final Report

Project Managers Development Scheme

Defence Sales

Functioning of Integrated Project Teams

Electronic Commerce

Smart Procurement Implementation Planning

Chief of Defence Logistics Implementation Planning

Defence Procurement Agency—Formation

Smart Procurement Implementation—Commercial Issues

Organisation Conjointe de Cooperation en Matiere d'Armement (OCCAR)

Industrial and Value for Money Implications of LTC 99.

RAF Special Storage Areas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF special storage areas have been closed since 1 April 1997; for what reason these special storage areas were closed; where these special storage areas were located; and on what date each was closed. [77149]

Mr. Spellar: Two RAF special storage areas were closed in 1998 because they were no longer needed following the withdrawal of the WE177 nuclear weapon. The location of these areas are covered by Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information because of the long-standing policy of neither confirming nor denying the presence of nuclear weapons at a particular time or place. This policy is, however, under review, and I will write to the hon. Member when the review is concluded.

Manston Airfield

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department will fully transfer responsibility for Manston Airfield to a civilian owner and relinquish responsibility for the operation and control of the airfield. [77222]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Training Aircraft (Kent)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision he has made, at which locations, for the future of (a) non-powered glider, (b) powered glider and (c) fixed wing aircraft training for air cadets based in Kent; and if he will make a statement. [77223]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Incompetent Teachers

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he has introduced to facilitate the removal from post of incompetent teachers. [74782]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a manifesto pledge which we took immediate action on following the 1997 general election. New procedures for dealing speedily and fairly with teachers who cannot do the job were agreed at a national level among representative parties. The National Employers Organisation for School Teachers (NEOST) have reported to the Department that most schools have now adopted the new procedures. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked NEOST to pursue follow-up action to pick up on the small number of LEAs that have not made good progress and will also conduct a survey to collect information on LEA experience in triggering capability procedures with a view to identifying good practice. In September, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will receive powers under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 to provide statutory guidance and where necessary impose appropriate staff capability procedures on schools. He will continue to monitor the situation to see whether any use of these powers will be necessary.

Disabled Students Allowance

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend the disabled students allowance to postgraduate study. [76738]

Mr. Mudie: We are currently considering the scope of the Disabled Students Allowances and will be making an announcement later in the year.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the extent of non-payment of student tuition fees at universities in England and Wales during the current year; and if he will make a statement. [75960]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The collection of fees is a matter for universities. In this, the first year of the new funding regime for higher education, only first year students will be subject to the new arrangements. Of these, we estimate around a third of students, from lower income families, will not be expected to contribute anything towards the costs of their tuition, and from those students who will be asked to contribute, universities and colleges in England and Wales are expected to receive income of £130 million and £8 million respectively.

Childcare Strategy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the national strategy on childcare; and if he will make a statement. [77013]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The National Childcare Strategy is already having a positive impact locally. Through the commitment of a wide range of partners, we are on target to create 60,000 new places in England in the year to April 1999.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69950]

Mr. Mudie [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1999, c. 71]: The original answer failed to differentiate between those bodies that publish information and those that make it available to the public on request. It also failed to differentiate between those bodies that publish or make available minutes of meetings and those that publish or make available summary reports of meetings.

The Education Transfer Council makes minutes available to the public on request; the Funding Agency for Schools publishes a bulletin which includes summary updates of key points of meetings; the Further Education Funding Council publishes summary reports of meetings; the Higher Education Funding Council for England makes summary reports of meetings available to the public on request; the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority publishes summary reports of meetings; and the Teacher Training Agency makes minutes available to the public on request. The publication of minutes is not a statutory requirement.

The Teacher Training Agency makes agendas available to the public on request. The publication of agendas and documents is not a statutory requirement.

The British Educational Communications and Technology Agency; the Education Transfer Council; the Funding Agency for Schools; the Higher Education Funding Council for England; the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority; and the Teacher Training Agency, make registers available to the public on request. The Construction Industry Training Board; the Engineering Construction Training Board; the Further Education Funding Council; Investors in People UK; and the Student Loans Company publish registers. Publishing the members' register of interests is not a statutory requirement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate from the PENSIM model the proportion of pensioners likely to have incomes of less than (1) 20 per cent. of average earnings and (2) 30 per cent. of average earnings, (a) including the impact of the minimum income guarantee and other means-tested assistance and (b) excluding all forms of means-tested assistance for (i) 2000, (ii) 2005, (iii) 2010, (iv) 2015, (v) 2020 and (vi) 2025; and if he will list the assumptions made, with particular reference to those relating to (x) growth in earnings, (y) returns on investment and (z) prices. [75232]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Percentage of pensioners with incomes below 20 per cent. and 30 per cent. of average earning

Percentage

	Proportion below 20 per cent. of average earnings		Proportion below 30 per cent. of average earnings
2000	30	[1]—	70	5
2005	20	[1]—	70	5
2010	30	[1]—	70	10
2015	20	[1]—	75	10
2020	30	[1]—	75	10
2025	20	[1]—	70	5

Total pensioner unit net income less income support and housing benefit

Percentage

	Single pensioners	Pensioner couples	Single pensioners	Pensioner couples
2000	50	[1]—	75	10
2005	45	[1]—	70	10
2010	40	[1]—	75	15
2015	40	[1]—	75	15
2020	45	[1]—	75	15
2025	40	[1]—	70	15

[1] = less than 2.5 per cent.

Notes:

1. The estimates requested have been made using the PENSIM model. Due to the number of assumptions used in PENSIM, and the uncertainty surrounding estimates so far into the future, these estimates should be considered as broad brush. In particular, PENSIM uses data from a number of different sources. As a result, changes over an interval as short as five years may be due to a change in the composition of the data set used to make projections. Therefore the results presented in the table should be treated with some caution and used to identify long-term trends rather than changes over short periods.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.
3. Average earnings are assumed to grow 1.5 per cent. faster than prices.
4. 20 per cent. of average earnings, in 1998 prices, for 2000 is £79.22 and 30 per cent. is £118.84.
5. The return on investments is assumed to be 2 per cent. greater than the rise in average earnings.
6. The answer is based on the current system of retirement pensions—it does not include the effects of the proposed State Second Pension which the Government are currently consulting on.
7. It is assumed that the Minimum Income Guarantee will be uprated broadly in line with earnings.
8. Part (b) is answered by deducting Income Support and Housing Benefit from pensioners' income. This is because the PENSIM model does not calculate other means-tested benefits.
9. A pensioner unit is defined as a single (non-cohabiting) person over State pension age or a couple (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over State pension age.

Housing Benefit (Rent Restrictions)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households with children were subject to housing benefit restrictions in 1997–98. [75929]

Angela Eagle: As at 31 May 1997, some 300,000 Housing Benefit recipients with children were subject to Housing Benefit restrictions, principally because of income or non-dependant deductions.

Notes:

1. Information refers to benefits units, which may be a single person or a couple.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Figures do not include restriction because of Rent Officers determinations or restrictions to the eligible rent due to the Local Reference rent scheme.

Source:

Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample inquiries with and without Income Support/JSA(IB), taken at the end of May 1997.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many households on income support were subject to rent restrictions affecting their housing benefit entitlement in 1997–98; and what was the average value of the restriction; [75933]

(2) how many people have been affected by single room rent restrictions since October 1996; and what have been the estimated savings; [75931]

(3) what was the total estimated saving arising from rent restrictions on housing benefit in 1997–98; and what was the total for each London borough; [75930]

(4) how many households have been subject to rent restrictions (a) in total and (b) in each London borough since 1997. [75932]

Angela Eagle: We do not centrally collect information of individuals' contractual rent because it will commonly include items not eligible for Housing Benefit. As a result the information requested is not available in the requested format.

The measures which limit the rent for Housing Benefit purposes are; certain service charges included in the contractual rent which are not generally eligible for Housing Benefit, for example, charges for cleaning, laundry, fuel, meals and personal care and nursing; the range of determinations, including determinations of single room rents, made by rent officers in respect of most claims from tenants living in the private rented sector; and where local authorities consider that the rent is unreasonably high or the accommodation overlarge or the eligible rent is none the less too high in respect of a particular case.

Departmental Computer System

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received from individuals on his Department's computer system in Newcastle during the last nine months; and if he will make a statement. [76444]

Mr. Timms: During the last nine months we have received 76 parliamentary questions and 82 representations by letter relating to the National Insurance Recording System (NIRS).

I refer the hon. Member to the written answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 15 March 1999, Official Report, columns 486–88.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic red boxes. [76167]

Mr. Timms: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, on 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 651–52.

Households Below Average Income

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of households below average income receive their main income from (a) paid employment and (b) benefits, indicating the benefits concerned; and if he will provide the same figures from the inception of the relevant survey. [76198]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The information is in the table.

Year	Main source of a household's income (percentage of total population of households) Benefits	Employment	Other	Total
1994–95	55	36	9	100
1995–96	53	38	9	100
1996–97	52	38	10	100

Notes:

1. 1994–95 is the earliest year for which the FRS based HBAI series is available. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available.
2. For the purposes of this analysis, 'benefits' were taken to be: Family Credit, Income Support, Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Social Fund (all components), State Retirement Pensions, Jobseeker's Allowance/Unemployment Benefit, Incapacity Benefit, Severe Disablement Allowance, Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance, Disability Working Allowance, Invalid Care Allowance, War Pensions, Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit, Child Benefit, One Parent Benefit, Windows Benefit, Guardians Allowance, Maternity Allowance, Statutory Sick Pay, Statutory Maternity Benefits, Back to Work Bonuses, Income from Government Training Schemes.
3. For the purposes of this analysis, 'main source of income' is defined as being the largest of the three sources of income outlined in the table.
4. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income which is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household).
5. It is standard HBAI practice to give results for income both before and after housing costs, in order to allow for the effect of variations in housing costs between households. In this case, the results are only quoted before housing costs, as they were invariant to the use of the two different income measures.

All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set which are based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland.

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons union facility time has been reduced to 10 days in the War Pensions Agency. [77186]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of the War Pensions Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Mr. Gordon Hextall. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Gordon Hextall to Mr. Hilton Dawson, dated 16 March 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the reasons why War Pensions Agency has reduced union facility time to 10 days.

I can confirm that War Pensions Agency has not reduced facility time to 10 days and has no intentions of doing so. Facility time arrangements are reviewed annually and negotiations are currently taking place with unions. These are not due to be completed until the end of March.

Any alterations to the current arrangements will be done in consultation with full-time union officials and will fully abide by Departmental guidelines.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Energy Imports

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the threat to the supply of imported energy from France and other countries posed by the millennium bug; and if he will make a statement. [76060]

Mr. Battle: The UK operation of the Anglo-French electricity interconnector is a commercial matter for the National Grid Company. It is normal operational procedure for the National Grid Company to assess continually the risk to electricity supplies in England and Wales which might arise from any credible instantaneous loss of power generation. As part of this procedure, the National Grid Company constantly monitors all credible losses and schedules sufficient reserve capacity to respond to them. In this context the Anglo-French Interconnector is assessed alongside generators in England and Wales. The capacity of the interconnector is $2 \times 1{,}000$ MW circuits, the installed generating capacity in England and Wales is more than 65,000 MW and the typical peak demand over New Years Eve is likely to be in the order of 37,000 MW.

Northern Ireland Electricity expect to provide a normal service to their customers over the period of the millennium and do not envisage any disruption being caused by a failure of the interconnector with the Republic of Ireland.

Cerebus Ltd.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when and for what purpose Ministers attended the opening of the headquarters and laboratories of Cerebus Ltd. [76371]

Mr. Battle: The company founder, Dr. Chris Evans, invited the then President of the Board of Trade, my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), to perform the opening ceremony on 24 March 1998.

Sports Clubs (Media Takeovers)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy on the acquisition of sports clubs by media companies. [76254]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 43.

Competition Act 1998

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department plans to publish its conclusions on the legality of vertical ties under the Competition Act 1998. [76255]

Mr. Byers: My Department is currently consulting publicly on a draft proposed order under section 50 of the Competition Act 1998, which would, if implemented, define and exclude vertical agreements from the prohibition of anti-competitive agreements in the Act. Views are being sought by 6 April and I expect to announce a decision about the scope of such an order within a reasonable time thereafter.

Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to publish the Government's proposals for changes to the regional aid map in the United Kingdom. [76283]

Mr. Byers: As soon as possible.

Renewable Energy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will commission a study of the potential of the UK manufacturing skill base to capture a proportion of the market for offshore wind energy turbines; [76164]

(2) what plans he has to develop a medium to long term strategy for the UK's renewable energy technologies; and what assessment he has made of the industry's ability to compete (a) globally and (b) with Denmark in the supply of offshore wind energy technology. [76166]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to a new and strong drive to develop renewable sources of energy and has undertaken a review of the status and prospects for renewables, including offshore wind energy. As a first step towards that policy the fifth and largest Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-5) Order of 1,177 MW was announced on 24 September 1998.

For the future the Government have been reviewing what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of the UK's electricity needs from renewables by 2010, and what contribution new and renewable energy technologies might make to future greenhouse gas commitments.

To achieve 10 per cent. electricity from renewables would require 3–4 Gigawatts (DNC) of additional renewable capacity over and above that in place or likely to be commissioned from existing NFFO arrangements. It would require the use not only of technologies which have formed the mainstay of NFFO to date, such as waste, including landfill gas and onshore wind but also a significant contribution from offshore wind and energy crops.

The Government will shortly be publishing a consultation document on the status and prospects for renewables. A co-ordinated strategy would need to be agreed between Government and industry to cover the medium-term future with a view also to the longer term.

Such a strategy is expected to arise from the renewables consultation document. It would need to take account of the European White Paper on renewables.

As for offshore wind, I have already consulted interested parties on the most suitable arrangements for incorporating the development of offshore wind energy into the NFFO process and the results of my consultation will be incorporated into the co-ordinated strategy arising from the renewables consultation document.

In the meantime, my Department's New and Renewable Energy Programme continues to support preparatory work on offshore wind, including monitoring the development of the first offshore wind NFFO project, at Blyth, and encouraging UK manufacturing industry to seize the commercial opportunities within the offshore wind arena. We have already awarded contracts to two offshore wind projects under NFFO-4. These are located at Gunfleet Sand, near Clacton, Essex, comprising 12.8 MW contracted capacity and the other at Blyth, Northumberland comprising 0.72 MW contracted capacity. Total DTI expenditure on wind energy projects in 1997–98 was £1.5 million.

Post Office

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the White Paper on the future of the Post Office. [76438]

Mr. Byers: It remains my expectation, as my right hon. Friend the Minister of State told the Trade and Industry Select Committee on 9 December, that the White Paper will be published in the first half of the year.

Trade Delegations

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many trade delegations he has led since becoming Secretary of State; and what trade delegations he has made plans to lead during the remainder of 1999. [76490]

Mr. Byers: I became Secretary of State at the beginning of this year. I will be making two major trade promotion visits later this year—the first to China (including Hong Kong), and Japan and the second to India and Saudi Arabia. In addition, I will be visiting Russia in May for the Intergovernmental Steering Committee on Trade and Investment.

Small Businesses

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small businesses he has visited in the last year. [76974]

Mr. Byers: In an official and unofficial capacity I have visited many small businesses in the last year.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will meet local hon. Members to discuss the latest BHP oil pollution incident; [76582]

(2) if he will make a statement on the recent oil pollution incident on the beaches of Rhyl and Prestatyn. [76584]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 March 1999]: An oil spill was reported from BHP's Liverpool Bay Development on Saturday 6 March, following which small amounts of oil were deposited on beaches in Rhyll and Prestatyn. BHP has shut down oil and gas production from the development until the cause and circumstances of the incident are identified.

My officials are working with the Maritime and Coastguard Agency in regard to this oil spill. The incident is being investigated by a DTI Inspector, and I will also ensure that an independent assessor conducts a review of the incident. I have told all concerned that I am looking for a thorough but prompt investigation.

I wrote to the local hon. Members for the Vale of Clwyd, for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) and for Delyn (Mr. Hanson) on 9 March informing them of this incident. I stated that I would continue to keep them in touch with developments I would be pleased to meet the hon. Members to discuss this incident.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all oil pollution incidents in the Irish Sea in the past 10 years, giving the size of the incident, the company responsible and the date. [76583]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The information relating to oil pollution incidents from offshore installations in the Irish Sea Basin over the last 10 years is as follows:

As an approximation 1 tonne = 1.25 cubic metres of oil.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the guidelines relating to oil pollution around the British coast following the new information about the effect of oil pollution of less than one part per billion. [76585]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 March 1999]: This information comes from studies into the Exxon Valdez oil spillage which occurred in 1989. It will be reviewed and taken into account by my officials and their colleagues in other Government Departments when considering the potential threat of oil spills to fisheries and the marine environment.

Victoria Street Conference Facilities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many outside organisations used the conference facilities at his offices in Victoria Street in the last year for which figures are available. [76975]

Dr. Howells: The majority of events making use of the Department's conference facilities at 1 Victoria Street are internal.

Of 2,495 events held during 1998, less than 1 per cent. were organised by outside bodies. A further 25 per cent. of events were co-ordinated by DTI staff but in conjunction with organisations from outside the Department.

The Department is currently reviewing the operation of its conference centre with a view to maximising its availability for Departmental events.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to visit India. [76976]

Mr. Byers: I will be visiting India later this year, at a date to be confirmed.

Trawlermen (Compensation)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the oral statement by the Parliamentary Secretary (Commons) to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 151–54, on claims for compensation by deep sea trawlermen, if he will (a) agree a date to meet the trawlermen and their representatives and (b) set out a timetable for the resolution of the claim. [76927]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 March 1999]: As my hon. Friend indicated during this debate, the obligations of the Department of Trade and Industry, and formerly the Employment Department, relate to the former trawlermen's redundancy entitlement under the statutory redundancy payments scheme. These obligations were fully met under ex-gratia arrangements operated by the Redundancy Payments Service between 1993 and 1995. My officials remain ready to consider late claims under those arrangements in appropriate cases. I have received no requests from the former trawlermen or their representatives for a further meeting to discuss their redundancy entitlement.

The former trawlermen's campaign for a more general scheme of Government compensation for the decline in their industry, going beyond their redundancy entitlement, is principally a matter for my hon. Friend to consider, as policy responsibility for the fishing industry lies with the Ministry for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he will take to ensure that claims for damages for miners' bronchitis and emphysema in respect of exposure to coal dust underground before 1954 from mines in Scotland will not be treated as subject to the provisions of the Limitations Act 1954. [77077]

Mr. Battle: The Limitations Act 1954 does not apply in Scotland. However, although the Department accepts liability for claims for damages for miners' emphysema and chronic bronchitis in respect of exposure to mine dust underground in mines in Scotland, the extent of that liability has not been established in the Scottish Courts. The litigation to date covers only England and Wales. The effect of Scottish law on claims from ex-British Coal miners claiming damages for respiratory diseases caused by exposure to dust in Scottish mines will be discussed with solicitors representing Scottish miners once we have agreed the handling arrangements for claims in England and Wales. We expect such agreement to be reached shortly.

Electricity Trading Prices

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make arrangements in the Review of Electricity Trading Arrangements for transparency of prices in trading contracts. [76580]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 March 1999]: I have asked the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure that, in developing new trading arrangements, there is adequate price transparency including in the contracts market.

Photovoltaic Industry

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 690, on the photovoltaic industry, what is his Department's budget in respect of photovoltaics; and what photovoltaic projects it plans to sponsor in developing countries in 1999–2000. [77073]

Mr. Battle: My Department is already committed to projects worth around £1 million for 1999–2000. Other projects, including the three initiatives I detailed in my previous answer (worth a total of £15 million, with £5 million coming from the DTI), will boost that figure significantly.

UK aid to developing countries is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Department of International Development (DFID). However, my Department, with DFID, is currently considering work through the International Energy Agency which could increase the rate of deployment of PV in Developing Countries and result in valuable business for UK based companies.

Incorporation Costs

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the total cost of incorporation, including professional fees, incurred by a business with profits of under £50,000 per annum. [76788]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The prescribed fee charged by the Registrar of Companies for incorporating any company is £20 for the normal five day service. A "premium", same day, service is also available for £100.

Many people choose to use the services of a formation agent or other professional intermediary to carry out the incorporation for them. In such cases the total cost can vary considerably depending on the intermediary used and the nature of the service provided. Such additional costs are subject to normal market force.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will require all employers to provide their workers with a statement about the national minimum wage on commencement of employment. [76045]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 March 1999]: There is no need to require employers to provide their workers with a national minimum wage statement. The Government have begun major campaigns in the press, and on television and radio, to make sure everyone knows about the minimum wage. We have also produced both a detailed guide to the national minimum wage, and short guides for employers and workers. In addition national minimum wage telephone helplines have been established to answer questions and issue the guidance booklets.

Arms Sales

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what cross-departmental initiatives have been introduced to track arms sales by United Kingdom companies. [75385]

Dr. Howells: Further to the answer given by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to the hon. Member on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 142, further details on progress improving the arrangements for the sharing of export licensing information were set out in the Department of Trade and Industry's Supplementary Memorandum to the Trade and Industry Committee's inquiry on Strategic Export Controls (HC65, pages 75–76). As noted in the memorandum, in addition to sharing information on licence applications, there is also a need to share information on licences issued and applications refused, and DTI's Export Control Organisation is working with HMC&E to examine the feasibility of making such information available electronically to Customs officials who have responsibility for enforcing export controls at the point of export. While the Export Control Organisation maintains records of licence applications, it does not compile records of licensed exports.

The new electronic application form described in the Memorandum was launched on 1 March 1999.

PRIME MINISTER

European Union Fraud

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 230, if he will publish the correspondence between his office and Pauline Green MEP prior to the European Parliament's vote on the censure motion on 14 January. [75717]

The Prime Minister: The right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) wrote to me on 3 March 1999. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will reply in due course.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 17 March. [76770]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

CABINET OFFICE

Public Services (Complaints)

15. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action he is taking to ensure that public services are more responsive to complaints from members of the public. [75371]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As part of the launch of the Service First programme last year, we issued guidance on the handling of complaints. We have also been working with the British Standards Institution to develop a national standard on complaints handling, which will be published in May. More recently, we have set up links from the Service First website to all of the main government complaints procedures that are available on the Internet and we are encouraging all those departments and agencies who have not yet done so to put their complaints procedures on the net.

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

16. Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will seek to extend the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to non-Governmental public bodies; [75372]

23. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to increase the number of public bodies within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. [75381]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) earlier today, Official Report, column 1114.

Joined-up Government

17. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what initiatives he plans to increase the co-ordination of policy across Government departments. [75374]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The restructured and strengthened Cabinet Office and the establishment of a number of cross-cutting units are helping to tackle policy and service delivery issues which cross conventional departmental boundaries. The White Paper on Modernising Government to be published shortly will set out further initiatives.

Government Agencies

18. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what measures he is taking to build on those improvements in the performance of Government agencies which are set out in 1998 Next Steps Agencies report. [75376]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I very much welcome the improvement in performance of executive agencies as highlighted in the 1998 Next Steps Report. It is essential, however, that this improvement is built upon. With the introduction of Public Service Agreements, agencies will have an important role to play in helping Ministers deliver the Government's new priorities and objectives. I have encouraged colleagues to ensure that agencies' targets for the coming year reflect this contribution to broader goals.

Drugs Policy

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on progress made in assessing the efficacy of his drugs policy. [75377]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government's anti-drugs strategy was launched last April. In September, I announced an additional £217 million for anti-drugs work from 1999–2002. There are now local plans to tackle drugs problems through Drug Action Teams across the country. The UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's progress report and a national plan will be available shortly.

Public Consultation

20. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had with other Government Ministers about the conduct of public consultation exercises. [75378]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Last year, the Cabinet Office published a guide on conducting written consultation exercises, setting out best practice for departments and agencies to follow when issuing consultation documents and taking follow-up action. The guide was widely discussed with other Government Departments before issue. We subsequently published a further, more general guide to consulting users of public services. Ministers have also been involved in various discussions on the People's Panel.

Better Government for Older People Initiative

21. Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement about progress with the development of the Better Government for Older People initiative. [75379]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Better Government for Older People initiative, a practical example of our commitment to modernising government, has important lessons to teach about working in partnership, and improving services through listening to the views of users and responding to their needs. Yesterday, we launched a Learning Network to cascade experience from the pilots. Many more local authorities, along with older people's organisations, and the academic world, can now be involved in this learning process through access to a database of good practice, and regular bulletins and workshops on developments across the programme.

Duchy of Cornwall

22. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what role the Duchy has in developing employment opportunities in its rural areas. [75380]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Duchy's role in developing employment opportunities in its rural areas falls under three headings: first, supporting its tenants in country areas who in turn create employment; secondly, by encouraging the re-use (for employment or residential purposes) of out dated agricultural buildings, and thirdly, by employing its own staff of contractors for the maintenance of properties and for the management of its woodlands.

Genetically Modified Organisms

24. Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what further steps he proposes to take to improve co-ordination across Government of issues relating to genetic modification. [75382]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification is responsible for co-ordination across Government on issues relating to genetic modification.

Deregulation

25. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement about the Government's deregulation strategy. [75383]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This Government are committed to ensuring that regulations are necessary, fair, effective, command public support and balance the benefits and costs.

My officials in the Better Regulation Unit have published new guidance to help departments to apply the Task Force's principles of good regulation and to assess the impact of regulatory proposals. When we consider regulating we will consult widely, and listen to those affected to ensure a balanced approach. No regulatory proposal which has an impact on businesses, charities or voluntary bodies should be considered by the Government without a thorough assessment of the risks, costs and benefits, a clear analysis of who will be affected and an explanation of why non-regulatory action would be insufficient. This guidance has been welcomed by the Prime Minister and commended to all Ministers and officials.

The Better Regulation Task Force supports our efforts to ensure that unnecessary regulatory burdens are identified for removal or reform. We welcome, for example, their work on Liquor Licensing and Long-term Care.

We are currently consulting on proposals to extend the order-making power in Section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to remove outdated and unnecessary legislation, without removing any of the safeguards.

Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects his review of the policy areas suitable for discussion using the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee mechanism to be completed. [75384]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 686.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if (a) he, (b) civil servants in his Department or (c) special advisers in his Department have (i) had sight of drafts of select committee reports, in whole or in part, or (ii) been informed of conclusions of select committee reports prior to their publication by the select committees. [75873]

Dr. Jack Cunningham [holding answer 10 March 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 1 March 1999, Official Report, column 531. There have been no instances of members of select committees giving me drafts of select committee reports, or of parts of reports including their conclusions, before publication. Nor to the best of my knowledge have there been any occasions on which members of Select Committees have given such material to civil servants or special advisers in my Department. This excludes embargoed copies of reports issued under House of Commons Standing Order 116.

Dr. George Poste

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list those Government advisory committees of which Dr. George Poste is (a) a member and (b) an adviser. [76245]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Current information on appointments held by individuals is not held centrally. The Public Appointments Unit maintains an internet directory of public appointments (at http://www.open.gov.uk/pau/paupoint.htm) which lists members of advisory non-departmental public bodies. This directory is updated twice a year on 1 September and on 1 April.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 18 March 1999

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76824]

Mrs. Beckett: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, special advisers in my Department have made one visit overseas in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council if she will name the Ministers in her Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76181]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office gave on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 651. Neither I nor the Parliamentary Secretary use an electronic box.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Hamilton v Al Fayed Case

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General when he was first notified of (a) the libel claim by Neil Hamilton and (b) the Court of Appeal hearing on appeal from the Queen's Bench Division; when he first responded to Mr. Hamilton's solicitors; when he decided to intervene in the case; when he first notified the House that he was intervening; and for what purpose. [77125]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General was first notified that Mr. Neil Hamilton was pursuing a libel action against Mr. Al Fayed in a letter from Mr. Hamilton's solicitors dated 30 June 1998. A response was sent to Mr. Hamilton's solicitors on 7 July 1998 saying that the Attorney-General did not propose to be represented at the hearing. the Attorney-General was notified that the Court of Appeal had granted leave to Mr. Al Fayed to appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Popplewell in a letter from Mr. Al Fayed's Solicitors dated 24 November 1998.

Following consultations with the House Authorities, the Attorney-General decided to seek to intervene in the action in December 1998. A letter recording that decision was sent to the Clerk to the House on 7 December 1998.

The purpose of the Attorney-General intervening was to present submissions to the Court of Appeal as to parliamentary privilege, in furtherance of the interests of the House.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library the Solicitor General's skeleton argument and appendices used in the Hamilton v Al Fayed case, together with a transcript of proceedings. [77126]

The Solicitor-General: I have arranged for a copy of my skeleton argument, together with its appendices, to be placed in the Library. It is important to note, however, that there were several modifications to the argument when presented orally. I have also placed in the Library a note prepared for the Court on the role of HM Attorney-General as intervenor in these proceedings. I am afraid that a transcript of the proceedings is not available and would take some weeks to prepare and approve. The Court of Appeal has reserved judgment in the matter, but as soon as an approved version of the judgment is available I will arrange for that, too, to be placed in the Library.

Serious Fraud Office (Secondments)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many secondments have been arranged in each year since 1995, between staff employed by the Serious Fraud Office and the relevant Financial Services Regulator. [76971]

The Attorney-General: No secondments were arranged in 1995. One secondment to a regulator or disciplinary body has been arranged in each subsequent year. In addition, one secondment was arranged prior to 1995 and was in place in 1995, and one secondment to the Financial Control Directorate General of the European Commission took place between 1994 and 1997.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions the Minister for Science has met officers or representatives of (a) Diatech Ltd., (b) Innotech Ltd., (c) Floranova Ltd., (d) Floranova Service Corp America, (e) Elite Seeds, and (f) Floranova s.a., Costa Rica, since becoming a Minister. [73134]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I am informed that on no occasion has Lord Sainsbury met with officers or representatives of any of these companies acting in an official capacity since his appointment. I understand that he has met with Christopher Stone of Diatech Ltd. on a number of times on a personal basis, but on no occasion were any aspects of the work or investments of any of the companies placed in the blind trust discussed.

Kvaerner Govan Yard

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's support for shipbuilding in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to the Kvaerner Govan yard. [74881]

Mr. Battle: To support the UK shipbuilding industry, I established in July 1998 the Shipbuilding Forum whose membership comprises representatives of the shipbuilding industry, its unions, equipment suppliers and customers, both private and public sector. Also involved are the training organisations and relevant Departments. The Forum's terms of reference from me were to consider the current situation of the shipbuilding industry and how to improve its competitiveness so as to increase its share of the European market, leading to increased output, profitability and employment. The Forum is currently preparing an Implementation Plan which it plans to deliver to me within the next few months. These Recommendations—currently more than 40—are to all the participants, not just to the Government. The Forum believes that these Recommendations will go a long way towards a marked improvement in the fortunes of the UK shipbuilding industry and I look forward to reading their Implementation Plan.

My Department gives Shipbuilding Intervention Fund grants to eligible UK yards, including Kvaerner Govan, at the maximum level permitted by the European Union's Shipbuilding Regulation and the Scottish Office made an offer to Govan of a grant under the Regional Selective Assistance programme.

EU Life Patents Directive

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in respect of the appeal by Italy and the Netherlands to the European Court of Justice against the EU Life Patents Directive. [74827]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 5 March 1999]: It is primarily a matter for the Council and European Parliament (as the institutions who adopted the Directive) to lodge the defence against the Netherlands' application seeking to annul Directive 98/44/EC on the Legal Protection of Biotechnological Inventions. EU member states had the opportunity to intervene in this case. The Government have carefully considered the terms of the Dutch action before the European Court of Justice and a decision has been taken not to intervene. We do not wish to add anything to the Council's arguments already lodged before the Court in response to the Dutch action.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) he, (b) civil servants in his Department or (c) special advisers in his Department have (i) had sight of drafts of select committee reports, in whole or in part, or (ii) been informed of conclusions of select committee reports prior to their publication by the select committees. [75882]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 10 March 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 1 March 1999, Official Report, column 531. There have been no instances of members of Select Committees giving me drafts of Select Committee reports, or parts of reports including their conclusions, before publication. Nor, to the best of my knowledge, have there been any occasions on which members of Select Committees have given such material to civil servants or special advisers in my Department.

British Exports (Euro)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the European Commission on the impact of the current value of the euro on British exporters. [76253]

Mr. Byers: I have had no such discussions.

Longbridge

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if BMW has applied to his Department for grant to make a new (a) Mini and (b) Rover 35 at Longbridge. [76259]

Mr. Byers: (a) No. (b) Yes.

Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76461]

Mr. Byers: Appointments made to my Department's public bodies since 1 November 1998 are shown on the attached tables with their positions and an indication of whether they receive remuneration.

Human Genetics

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members of the working group of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority that recently considered issues relating to human cloning; if he will list in the case of each of those members the outside interests that were declared; and if he will indicate which of those members have academic qualifications in (a) ethics, (b) psychology, (c) philosophy and (d) sociology. [76240]

Mr. Battle: The members of the joint working group were nominated by the Human Genetics Advisory Commission (HGAC) and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA). The group was chaired by the Reverend Dr. John Polkinghorne (HGAC). It also comprised Dr. George Poste (HGAC), Professor Christine Gosden (HFEA) and Dr. Anne McLaren (HFEA).

All members of the HFEA and HGAC, whose membership covers a wide range of experience and backgrounds including ethicists, psychologists, philosophers and sociologists, made full contributions to the report and approved it in its final form for publication.

The declarations of interest of all members of the HGAC and HFEA are available for public inspection in accordance with, "Quangos—Opening the Doors", Cabinet Office Guidance (June 1998). Full details of members' academic qualifications are not held centrally, and will not indicate all relevant experience. Requested information held for members of the working group is as follows:

Reverend Dr. John Polkinghorne KBE FRS

Chairman, Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing. Member of the General Synod and the Board of Social Responsibility of the Church of England, Fellow of the Royal Society, Past President of Queens' College Cambridge.

Dr. George Poste CBE FRS

Chief Science and Technology Officer, SmithKline Beecham Plc. Fellow of the Royal Society, Board member, SmithKline Beecham Plc, Non-Executive Chairman, Cerebrus Holdings Plc, Non-Executive Chairman, DiaDexus (USA).

Professor Christine Gosden

Professor of Medical Genetics, University of Liverpool, Liverpool Women's Hospital. Past chair of the MRC Unit's Ethical Committee.

Dr. Anne McLaren DBE FRS

Principal Research Associate, Wellcome CRC Institute, Cambridge. Member of the Nuffield Council on Bioethics and the European Commission's Group of Expert Advisers on Ethics.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the report on human cloning from the working group of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [76238]

Mr. Battle: The Government are giving careful consideration to the report of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, "Cloning Issues in Reproduction Science and Medicine", and will publish its response as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with effect from what date Sir Colin Campbell resigned as Chairman of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission; and what reasons he gave for his resignation. [76236]

Mr. Battle: Sir Colin Campbell resigned as Chairman of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission on 5 February 1999, as he was anticipating non-executive responsibilities with a major insurance company, and in case HGAC should in future return to consider genetics and insurance wished to remove himself from any possible future conflict of interest.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the review of the Assisted Areas map and the timing of its conclusions. [76666]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Under the European Guidelines, a new Assisted Areas map for the UK must operate from 1 January 2000. Changes to the Assisted Areas map must be agreed with the Commission, and they have asked for proposals from member states by 31 March. Ministers are currently considering which proposals they will put forward.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the annual additional number of claims for unfair dismissal that will be made as a result of the reduction in the length of the qualifying period of employment to one year. [76669]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 March 1999]: We shall be publishing estimates in the Regulatory Impact Assessment once the order has been laid before Parliament.

Maternity Leave

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made for (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) larger companies of the average cost resulting from an employee taking maternity leave. [76674]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The cost to an employer from an employee taking maternity leave will depend on many factors, most significantly, how many weeks of maternity leave are taken and what the employee's length of service is.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the minimum wage on organisations which offer board and lodging as part of their remuneration package. [75577]

Mr. Byers: The impact of the national minimum wage on organisations which provide board and lodgings as part of their remuneration package will vary in the light of their particular circumstances.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Foreign Language Broadcasting

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the provision of foreign language broadcasting in the United Kingdom (a) on television and (b) on radio; and if he will make a statement. [72628]

Janet Anderson: The Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority license a number of channels which provide foreign language services to UK audiences. The television channels are available on the satellite and cable medium, whilst the radio channels are aimed at local audiences.

My Department has not received any representations on the provision of foreign language broadcasting in the UK for either television or radio where the target audience is principally within the UK. I have received several representations in respect of foreign language satellite television stations broadcasting from within the UK but aimed primarily at audiences abroad.

I am writing to the hon. Member with details of the licensed services and will place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) when the contract to establish the Wembley Trust with the FA and the English Sports Council will be announced; [75852]

(2) how much money has been spent on the purchase of Wembley plc by (a) the English Sports Council and (b) the Government. [75853]

Mr. Banks: Lottery funding of £120 million has been awarded by the English Sports Council towards the purchase of the existing Wembley stadium from Wembley plc, and its reconstruction as a National Stadium for football, rugby league and athletics. No Government funding has been provided.

The English National Stadium Development Company is responsible for taking reconstruction work forward. The English National Stadium Trust, which already exists as a charitable company limited by guarantee, will act as a watchdog for the public interests in the project.

The Wembley sale was finalised on 15 March. We now have a firm foundation from which to drive the National Stadium project forward which is great news for the 2006 World Cup bid, and our efforts to bring major international sporting events to this country.

Millennium Experience

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will announce the ticket prices for the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. [78042]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has today announced the pricing structure for entrance to the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. This includes attractive discounts for families and groups. I have placed the full text of the NMEC's News Release in the Libraries of the House.

Prices for the Millennium Experience at the Dome were confirmed as:

Education Tours Scheme for Schools (ages 8 to 16)	[1]Free of charge

[1] As part of the NMEC's pricing strategy up to 1 million free tickets will be made available for children through the Education Tours Scheme for schools

The NMEC has announced the prices seven months ahead of tickets going on sale to the public to allow the travel industry to finalise its prices. The NMEC is also in detailed negotiations with rail and coach operators about discounted travel to the Dome. National Express coach operators have confirmed that they are proposing to offer, subject to negotiation, a discount travel deal offering a combined return coach ticket and admission to the Dome for £29.99 from anywhere in England, Scotland or Wales.

The Government agree with the NMEC that these prices represent value for money and will enable the Company to achieve its forecast 12 million visitors to what will be the largest concentration of educational, inspirational and entertaining attractions under one roof anywhere in the world during 2000.

Athletics

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has for the World Class Performance Programme for the United Kingdom's top athletes. [78043]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Sports Cabinet met for the second time on Wednesday last week and decided on a package of Lottery support to back our top sportsmen and women.

The Government will shortly lay before Parliament an Order which will make the UK Sports Council a Lottery distributor and earmark a percentage of the Lottery Sports Fund for them to distribute for the UK's best sportsmen and women for them to train and prepare for competition.

A joint scheme has already been pioneered by the four Sports Councils for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

This decision builds on that scheme and its success, makes a strong commitment to future funding, and, for the first time, ensures that the top UK athletes from whatever part of the country are backed by a single unified and well run scheme.

Regular and independent reports to Ministers and to the UK Sports Council on the way the money is being spent, and its effectiveness in helping the UK's top athletes to maximise their potential and achieve sporting success, and in bringing medals and championship titles to the UK, will be built in from the outset.

This programme will be closely linked to the development of the UK Sports Institute. The Government has already announced the new direction it is giving with more of the Institute's facilities built throughout the country where athletes actually want to live and train, and a strategic Headquarters to co-ordinate services and set standards across the national network.

As a consequence, the balance of expenditure between Headquarters and regions will change with more being spent on the regional facilities in line with the results of wide consultation of athletes and governing bodies which the Sports Councils have carried out, and the required funding for capital work on the Headquarters building being accordingly substantially reduced. The Headquarters will concentrate on its crucial role of oversight of the provision of the best in sports science and medicine, and quality assurance of the network sites, and will now be the direct responsibility of the UK Sports Council.

In line with that policy, Ministers have now decided that greater emphasis should be placed on training and preparation programmes. The proposed Order will earmark a percentage of Lottery funding, which should generate £20.5 million for the World Class Performance and Events Programmes.

Within this sum of Lottery funding, it is expected that the UK Sports Council should have about £2 million annually to help attract to and stage major sporting events in this country. The Sports Cabinet sees a close link between these programmes. They will both benefit all parts of the UK fairly, where close joint working is needed if we are to succeed on the international scene—and the best possible place for a top performance is in front of an enthusiastic home crowd against the best world competition.

These two programmes will be closely co-ordinated with the work of the four Home Country Sports Councils, who will continue to back excellence in sports which compete separately as England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and in helping to identify and support up-and-coming talent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of applicants' passports held at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate awaiting a decision; what arrangements he will make for temporary travel documents to be issued for those whose applications are delayed as a result of reorganisation at IND; and what proposals he has for offering compensation to those who are disadvantaged as a result of the delays. [76615]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate has estimated the approximately 22,000 passports are currently being held. Travel Documents will be issued only to people who have valid leave to remain in the United Kingdom. It is, therefore, not possible to issue documents where an application for leave remains outstanding, although passports will be returned to applicants when they need to travel. Compensation will be paid only in cases of maladministration where the costs are reasonable and have been actually and necessarily incurred: each case will be treated on its merits.

Suicides (Prisons)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides there have been in prisons, remand centres and youth detention centres in each of the last 10 years; and how many were of persons under the age of 21 years. [76936]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is given in the table.

Year	Number of SIDs in prisons of persons aged under 21 years	Number of SIDs in remand centres of persons aged under 21 years	Number of SIDs in young offender institutions of persons aged under 21 years	Total number of SIDs	Number of SIDs of prisoners aged under 21 years
1988	8	—	1	37	9
1989	9	1	2	48	12
1990	5	3	2	50	10
1991	1	—	4	42	5
1992	1	2	4	41	7
1993	1	1	1	47	3
1994	6	3	1	62	10
1995	4	2	2	59	8
1996	5	1	6	64	12
1997	—	4	5	68	9
1998	6	3	5	83	14

SIDs—self-inflicted deaths

Notes:

1. Establishments have been categorised according to their main role only. Establishments that have more than one role have been placed in the category that represents their primary function (i.e. Doncaster is a local prison which also holds a significant number of young offenders).
2. Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

Thomas Tangney

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons Thomas Tangney was considered suitable for transfer to Ford Open Prison. [77321]

Mr. George Howarth: Mr. Tangney met the criteria which need to be satisfied before a transfer to open prison conditions takes place. These criteria were set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 11 March 1999, Official Report, column 332. The decision to transfer Mr. Tangney to open prison conditions was taken by Ministers on the recommendation of the Parole Board in line with normal practice in these cases.

Europol

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 267–68, if the National Criminal Intelligence Service can access the Schengen Information System without the unanimous agreement of the Schengen states. [77165]

Kate Hoey: Direct access to the Schengen Information System (SIS) by the National Criminal Intelligence Service and other law enforcement agencies could be secured only if the United Kingdom was a member of the SIS. The SIS is part of the Schengen acquis, which will be incorporated into the European Union on the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam. In accordance with Article 4 of the Schengen Protocol, any request by the United Kingdom to take part in some or all of the existing provisions of the Schengen acquis is subject to the agreement of the thirteen Schengen states. As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary stated in his reply to the right hon. Member on 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 380–82, the SIS is one of the areas of the acquis in which the United Kingdom intends to seek participation.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 267–68, what initial increased use of Europol facilities and sharing of information has taken place since the signing of the Treaty of Amsterdam. [77166]

Kate Hoey: Although the Treaty of Amsterdam was signed on 2 October 1997, it has not yet been ratified by all member states. It is not therefore in force.

As I indicated in my reply of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 267–68, Europol has not yet taken up its full range of activities. Increased use is generally being made of the Europol Drugs Unit (EDU). In 1997, the EDU handled a total of 2,608 requests for information from member states' law enforcement agencies, compared with 2,053 requests in 1996. Of these, 984 requests (453 in 1996) emanated from the United Kingdom, channelled through the National Criminal Intelligence Service on behalf of United Kingdom law enforcement agencies. In 1998, the United Kingdom was the second largest user of the information exchange facilities provided by the EDU.

From a total of 2,298 requests for information, 394 originated in the United Kingdom. The majority of requests relate to illegal trafficking.

New Prison, Peterborough

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to make an announcement about his proposal to build a new prison in Peterborough; [77446]

(2) on whose authority labour councillors in Peterborough have been informed that an announcement on a proposed new prison in Peterborough will be delayed until after the European election in June. [77447]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions expects to determine within the next three weeks the Prison Service's appeal against Peterborough City Council's refusal to grant planning permission for the construction of a new prison in Peterborough. I am not aware that any information about that decision has been given to local councillors.

"Jailbirds: Through the Gates"

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if each of the prisoners appearing in the BBC1 documentary, Jailbirds: Through the Gates, on 15 March, had individually given permission to be filmed; and if he will make a statement. [77463]

Mr. George Howarth: Yes. Prisoners individually featured in the programme gave their written consent. Prisoners were warned, where possible, prior to filming taking place and all prisoners were given the opportunity not to appear.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will pay compensation to those whose applications to the Immigration and Nationality Department have been delayed by the failure to operate the full casework information technology application and changeover to the new system. [76442]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We very much regret the current delays to applications being considered in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. It has always been our practice to consider making ex gratia payments in individual cases where applicants are able to demonstrate, with full supporting evidence, that they have actually and necessarily incurred additional costs.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 651, what has been the extent of the temporary reduction in service standards and numbers of casework decisions in the Immigration and Nationality Department; and when he expects the full casework information technology application to be operational and the previous throughput of casework to be achieved. [76441]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The temporary reduction in service standards does not apply to all areas in the new Directorate. The Public Caller Unit, for example, has been able to maintain productivity throughout the reorganisation, and indeed it is now exceeding previous productivity rates. However, in other areas there has been a fairly significant reduction in service and productivity during the months of January and February, when we were moving offices. Now that much of the move has been made, the position is improving: productivity has been rising and we are mounting special exercises to target priority cases such as work permits. Our aim is to reach the levels of throughput previously achieved within a few weeks.

In recent discussions with my officials, Siemens Business Services have maintained that the revised schedule for introduction of the full Information Technology solution will be achieved. This would mean pilot implementation beginning in the summer with roll-out being completed early next year.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the extra time applicants are having to wait for the Immigration and Nationality Department to resolve their cases as a result of the failure to operate the full casework information technology application. [76443]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The disruption caused by the reorganisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) has meant some temporary delay in the processing of cases, particularly during the months of January and February. The position is improving: productivity has been rising and we are mounting special exercises to target priority cases. In the majority of straight forward cases, the delay is now a matter of weeks only. The expectation is that the situation will continue to improve.

We do, however, recognise that there is a large backlog of IND cases, the great majority preceding the reorganisation. There are, for example, currently 104,356 cases in IND's central Work in Progress Store, many of which are over five years old. Our plans for dealing with this backlog are set out in the Government's White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum".

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Packaging Industry

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is proposing to tackle the devices used by companies to avoid making contributions under the packaging waste regulations; and if he will make a statement. [76382]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency have a duty to monitor compliance with the packaging Regulations. In the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon) on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 335–37, I welcomed the efforts being made by the Agencies to strengthen their enforcement programmes and I understand that the Environment Agency has started the process for taking proceedings against a number of companies which failed to register in 1998.

I also said that I would be asking the Agencies to publish their monitoring programmes and report half-yearly as to the number, size and sector of businesses checked for registration, data provision and for compliance with the recovery and recycling obligations.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received over his proposed changes to the share out of the percentage activity obligations within the packaging industry; and what plans he has to review the percentages. [76383]

Mr. Meacher: As I stated in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon) on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 335–37, my Department will very shortly be issuing a consultation document on the proposed changes to the percentage activity obligations. All responses to the document will then be taken into consideration.

Urban Parish Councils

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many urban parish councils he has approved within the boundaries of unitary councils; if he will list the council areas concerned; and if he will make a statement on the statutory powers given to the urban parish councils. [76619]

Ms Armstrong: Under the Local Government and Rating Act 1997, the Secretary of State has approved 8 new parishes within unitary authority areas: Allerton Bywater, and Horsforth in Leeds; Southsea in Portsmouth; Beverley, and Cottingham in the East Riding of Yorkshire; Headland in Hartlepool; East Cowes on the Isle of Wight; and Mossley in Tameside. Using the Department's standard statistical definition of urban areas and population from the 1991 census, with the exception of Allerton Bywater, all the new parishes can be defined as urban. These parishes have the same statutory powers as any other parish council.

Telecommunications Developments

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department has issued to planning authorities about their consideration of new telecommunications developments and the controls which they have over their siting. [76628]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning policy guidance on telecommunications development is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 8 (revised December 1992), supplemented by Appendix E to DoE Circular 9/95 and by the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning on 4 November 1997, Official Report, columns 152–53. Copies of that answer were circulated to local planning authorities at that time. In addition, my Department has published in March 1996 a Code of Best Practice for local planning authorities and telecommunications code system operators on telecommunications prior approval procedures as applied to mast/tower development. We intend to consult shortly on draft guidance to accompany the changes to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 announced by my right hon. Friend in a written answer on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 343–44.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce proposals to extend access to the countryside for horse riders, cyclists and recreational vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [76613]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's "Framework for Action" for improving access to the countryside, which I announced to the House on 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 21–33, comprises a package of measures intended to benefit all those who enjoy informal recreation in the countryside. Horse riders, cyclists and users of recreational vehicles gain access mainly through the rights of way network and the improvements proposed to the network will therefore be of particular interest to them. We are keeping their interests in mind in developing detailed proposals.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civil servants in his Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in his Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76809]

Mr. Meale: As the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, for Trade and Industry, and for Education and Employment share responsibility for the Government Offices in England, this answer also covers the Government Offices.

The following numbers of staff in DETR(C) and its Agencies, and in the Government Offices, have signed an agreement to disapply the 48 hour limit:

	Number of staff
DETR(C)	37
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency	28
Driving Standards Agency	0
Highways Agency	0
Maritime and Coastguard Agency	1
Planning Inspectorate	1
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	49
Vehicle Certification Agency	0
Vehicle Inspectorate	0
Government Office for the East of England	0
Government Office for the East Midlands	3
Government Office for London	1
Government Office for the North East	0
Government Office for the North West	4
Government Office for the South East	3
Government Office for the South West	0
Government Office for the West Midlands	3
Government Office for Yorkshire and the Humber	7

[1] Currently ten staff are discussing whether there are sound operational reasons to sign a waiver

The standard terms and conditions of service for staff are well within the limits set by the Working Time Regulations 1998. The Regulations do not require employers to keep records of the number of workers who refuse to sign an opt-out agreement and therefore no central records have been kept. Compliance costs are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Waste Paper Processing

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the implications of the High Court judgment of November 1998 on the dispute between the Environment Agency and Mayer Parry Recycling Ltd.; and if he will make contact with representatives of the waste paper processing industry on this matter. [76968]

Mr. Meale: A statement on the High Court judgment in the Mayer Parry case, which took account of judgments by the European Court of Justice, was issued by the Environment Agency on 16 November 1998. As matters stand, we do not have anything to add to that statement. We have no plans to make contact with the waste paper processing industry on this matter but we are considering representations which this industry has made about the implications of the judgment.

"A New Deal for Transport"

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has (a) to approve and (b) to initiate developments relating to airports before the completion of the economic impact studies covering airports and air services announced in "A New Deal for Transport"; and if he will make a statement. [76986]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Airport development is promoted by developers through the normal planning process, though major schemes will usually be decided by the Secretary of State following a public inquiry. Airports projects for which planning applications have already been made, or are expected to be made shortly, will not be within the scope of the Regional Air Services studies, because it would cause duplication and delay if we were to study projects which are being considered in the land use planning system at the same time; the study will therefore examine a range of scenarios based on those projects either going ahead or not going ahead, and will concentrate on strategic medium and long term issues.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the study of the economic impact of regional airports and regional air services announced in "A New Deal for Transport"; when these studies will be completed in the (a) North of England, (b) Midlands and (c) South West; and if he will make a statement. [76985]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The studies of regional airports and air services in the North of England, Midlands and South West announced in the "A New Deal for Transport" White Paper have all now been commissioned and are expected to report in the summer. In line with our White Paper commitments, each study will include an examination of the link between air services, economic growth and regeneration in the regions concerned. In accordance with our integrated transport policy, the studies will also consider surface access to the airports concerned.

Mercury Pollution

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of (a) the level of mercury pollution in groundwater, (b) its source and (c) the remedial action needed. [76952]

Mr. Meale: Environment Agency monitoring of groundwater has not shown concentrations above the analytical detection limit, and mercury is generally not present in groundwater. However, there may be sites where processes using mercury (including parts of the millinery and electrical industries) have resulted in contamination, with consequent risks to groundwater, although mercury contamination from such sites would not be widespread. The Groundwater Regulations 1998 prohibit the discharge of mercury to groundwater, and provide for controls over activities which might result in the discharge of mercury to groundwater.

Air Rage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents classified as air rage there have been on UK carriers in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [76949]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the Mandatory Occurrence Report Scheme currently established by article 106 of the Air Navigation (No. 2) Order 1995, the commander of a UK registered or operated aircraft must report to the Civil Aviation Authority any incident

"endangering, or if not corrected would endanger, the aircraft, its occupants or any other person".

The CAA's MORS database does not have a classification of "air rage" and it is therefore not possible to provide the figures requested. However, we have recently reviewed the 1997 MORS reports relating to passenger behaviour. This revealed some 88 incidents of disruptive behaviour by passengers which had actual or potential safety implications. Of these, some 24 incidents involved physical violence or the need by the crew to restrain a passenger.

It is because of the lack of accurate information on the scale of the problem that we have established a new system for airlines to report to the CAA all incidents of disruptive behaviour by passengers on board UK aircraft. The first figures from this new reporting system should be available later this year.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses he has received to his consultation document on leasehold reform; and if he will publish them. [77123]

Mr. Raynsford: We had received 643 responses to the consultation paper by the requested date of Friday 12 March, and we are likely to receive some additional late ones. All responses will be made available to the public, barring those which we have been asked to treat as confidential. We will announce the arrangements for their inspection in due course.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what incentives the Government are providing to increase the use of waste incinerators. [75962]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The Government are considering the role of waste incinerators with energy recovery as part of the review of the waste strategy for England and Wales. Their consultation paper Less Waste: More Value published in June 1998 said:

The Government's view is that, alongside a move to a higher level of recycling, a move to a higher level of incineration with energy recovery is necessary over the next 10–15 years in order to move to a more sustainable waste management system.

They also sought views on this approach and asked how the role of energy recovery as part of an integrated approach to waste management could be enhanced.

A draft of the new waste strategy which takes into account the responses to the consultation document will be published later in the spring.

Buses (Access)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with bus manufacturers on the development of buses to provide improved facilities for (a) elderly and (b) disabled people. [77274]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Manufacturers have been closely involved throughout the process of developing standards for accessible buses. Meetings have taken place with a cross section of representatives of industry and with individual bus manufacturers on both technical and operational matters. An informal consultation on regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to require improved access to buses and coaches took place in 1998, and a formal consultation on the draft regulations is planned for this year.

The regulations will progressively require a lower first step height, provision for wheelchair users and other passengers with a wide range of disabilities, starting in January 2000. End dates are also being proposed for all regulated buses and coaches to ensure that over a reasonable timescale they all become fully accessible.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce his response to the Countryside Commission's report on the future funding and management of Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. [77272]

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision about the future status and management of the South Downs. [77313]

Mr. Meale: We are still looking carefully at the issues dealt with in the Countryside Commission's advice relating both to Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty generally and to the South Downs in particular. We hope to announce some conclusions soon.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) borrowings and (b) borrowing limits of each local authority for each year for which figures are available since 1990. [77440]

Ms Armstrong: The latest information on levels of debt outstanding for each local authority in England relates to 31 March 1997. I have today placed this information in the Library of the House. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Under Part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, local authorities may borrow for any purpose relevant to their statutory functions. Their total liabilities in respect of outstanding borrowing and other forms of credit must not exceed their Aggregate Credit Limit. The main effect is that authorities may borrow for capital expenditure up to the amount of the credit approvals issued to them by the Government. They may also undertake very limited temporary borrowing for revenue purposes. The Aggregate Credit Limit changes frequently and figures are not collected centrally.

Heathrow (Terminal 5)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the public inquiry on Heathrow's proposed Terminal 5 to reach a decision. [77310]

Mr. Caborn: The public inquiry closed on 17 March and the Inspector has said that he expects to take up to two years to produce his report. The Secretary of State will need to give the report full consideration before reaching a decision.

Planning

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received from hon. Members concerning planning matters in 1999. [77309]

Mr. Raynsford: Comprehensive information is not available in the form requested and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Green Belt (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many acres of Green Belt there were in Leicestershire at the latest available date. [77311]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no designated Green Belt land in Leicestershire.

Bengal Tigers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment

he made during his visit to India of the prospects for the future of the Bengal tigers and the steps India is taking to protect them. [75690]

Mr. Prescott: During my visit to India I addressed the Millennium Tiger Conference and, as a guest of the Indian Government, visited Ranthambore Tiger Reserve where tiger numbers are slowly recovering as a result of positive protection and co-operation to meet the needs of local people.

I was impressed by the clear commitment to tiger conservation shown by the Indian Government and in particular, by Suresh Prabhu, the Indian Environment Minister, and Director of Project Tiger, Mr. P. K. Sen. However, in spite of their efforts, and those of many committed Indian officials, reserve wardens and NGOs, tigers in India still face serious threats. These are set down in the Millennium Tiger Conference's final communiqué and include the loss of habitat to large scale development projects; habitat degradation from livestock grazing and increased human population; and poaching to supply the continuing demand for tiger body parts.

The Conference agreed to address these by recommending that land use policies recognise the importance of tiger habitats and that revenues from Protected Areas be reinvested in tiger conservation. The meeting also emphasised the importance of improving legislation and strengthening enforcement. The Declaration calls for more effort from consumer countries in controlling domestic trade in tiger parts and derivatives, an issue that the CITES Tiger Missions, launched in London by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), will pursue when visiting range states including India, and consuming countries such as Japan, in the early summer.

Whilst in India, I announced the UK's intention to join the Global Tiger Forum, together with a new grant of £50,000 to go towards enforcement work in India and an Indonesian project to protect the Sumatran tiger. This brings the UK's total contribution to tiger conservation to £200,000 over the past two years.

Oceans (Environmental Protection)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his discussion with Vice-President Gore about protecting the world's oceans. [75692]

Mr. Prescott: During Vice-President Gore's visit to London on Saturday 30 January 1999, we discussed protection of oceans. I stressed to him the opportunity offered by this year's consideration of oceans and seas by the UN Commission on Sustainable Development to make progress both on the protection of the world's marine environments and the way in which the UN system handles the issue.

Housing Policy Green Paper

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if the Housing Policy Green Paper will consult on proposals to help homeless people; and if he will make a statement; [77303]

(2) when he expects to publish the Housing Policy Green Paper; and if he will make a statement. [77304]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Policy Green Paper will be published later this year. It will consult on a number of proposals to help meet our objective to offer everyone including homeless people the opportunity of a decent home.

As I indicated in my earlier reply to a Question from my hon. Friend on 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 519–20, we intend to consult widely on any proposals for strengthening the assistance and protection available to homeless people but no date has been set for completion of the necessary consideration of the steps that might be taken in this respect.

Travellers (Millennium Celebrations)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if his Department, in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence, will carry out an audit of sites within the ownership of the Crown which could be made available for the temporary encampment of travellers over the period of Christmas 1999 and the millennium celebrations; [77478]

(2) how many authorised sites for travellers exist within England and Wales large enough to accommodate more than 150 caravans and several hundred people over the period of Christmas 1999 and the millennium celebrations; [77477]

(3) what arrangements are in hand within his Department, the Home Office and the Welsh Office jointly to identify sites which could offer temporary provision for large gatherings of travellers over the period of Christmas 1999 and the millennium celebrations; [77476]

(4) what arrangements his Department and the Welsh Office have made to use (a) the National Gypsy Council and (b) other bodies to ensure that travelling families are made aware of facilities that the Government propose to make available to travellers over the period of Christmas 1999 and the millennium celebrations. [77475]

Mr. Raynsford: There are over 300 authorised local authority Gypsy caravan sites in England and Wales although we know of none which would accommodate more than 150 caravans. My Department does not hold data on the capacity of privately owned Gypsy caravan sites. The Government have no plans to make Crown land available specifically for Gypsies and Travellers proposing to celebrate the millennium.

My Department and the Home Office have recently published joint good practice advice for local authorities and the police for managing unauthorised camping by travellers generally. The good practice was developed with the assistance of a number of groups representing Gypsy/Traveller interests, including the National Gypsy Council.

We want local authorities and the police to develop joint protocols to ensure proper and sensitive management of traveller encampments, including effective handling of any problems of crime and disorder which may arise particularly with large encampments. As part of this exercise, local authorities should be identifying acceptable stopping places for travellers.

The Home Office are also undertaking a series of visits to local authorities to ensure their preparedness to deliver emergency planning responsibilities over the period of the millennium celebrations. Areas under consideration include the management of serious public disorder resulting from large gatherings of people, irrespective of whether Travellers are involved or not.

Floorcoverings Classifications

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the request by the British Carpet Manufacturers Association for a delay in making a decision on the European Classifications of Floorcoverings for reaction to fire. [77298]

Mr. Raynsford: The decision on the reaction to fire for floorcoverings was postponed in December 1998 to permit consultation with industry and will be tabled again in April 1999. In the meantime, I have met the British Carpet Manufacturers Association and they are aware that a further delay is unlikely to be supported by the European Commission or other Member States.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Running Costs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the annual cost of running the House of Commons in each of the last five years; and what was the cost excluding major new building work for the latest available period. [76937]

Mr. Kirkwood: The administrative cost of running the House of Commons is given in the table.

Costs of running the House of Commons 1993–98

Early-day Motions

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what, in each of the three most recent years for which figures are available, were (a) the total costs relating to early day motions and (b) the average cost of the reprinting of individual motions when names were added. [77436]

Mr. Kirkwood: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Complaints

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will lay before Parliament the 1998 Annual report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [77926]

Marjorie Mowlam: The 1998 Annual Report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints is being laid before Parliament today. The Report, which follows the format of previous years, comments on the work of the Commission in 1998, its 11th year dealing with alleged complaints against the RUC.

I should like formally to record the Government's thanks to the Chairman and Members of the Commission and to the staff for their continued excellent work during this past year and for producing this Report. In this respect, I would like to highlight and endorse the Chairman's introduction to the Report in which he says that in spite of the already heavy workload of (Commission members and) staff, and the extra demands on them in facilitating the transition to the establishment of the Ombudsman's office, their "commitment, professionalism and enthusiasm stand as a tribute to each and every one of them."

I know that the police, particularly in Complaints and Discipline Department, have shown similar commitment, and I would like to place that on record also.

The work on establishing the Office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland is continuing and we will be re-advertising the Ombudsman post shortly. This is an important new office, which, along with the other changes in policing that are in train, should contribute further to improving public confidence in the police in Norther Ireland.

The 1998 Report notes that there was a reduction of nearly 15 per cent. in the number of cases of complaint received by the Commission, compared with the number received in 1997, down from 3,111 to 2,651. The figures since 1991, however, have remained around the 2,500 level. It also notes that the number of cases for mandatory supervision has remained at about 100 and the number of discretionary cases was lower than expected at 171. Of the 2,383 cases closed in 1998, 562 were withdrawn, 682 were dispensed with (usually because a complainant would not co-operate with an investigation) and disciplinary action was considered in over 1,000. The DPP directed 5 criminal charges, there were 19 formal disciplinary charges and 104 informal disciplinary actions.

In light of the appalling murder of Rosemary Nelson, I think it important and appropriate to highlight the reference in the report to the complaints made by and on behalf of Mrs. Nelson. The Commission refer to their "serious concern" about the conduct of the investigation. They raised these with the Chief Constable and me last Summer. As a consequence, the Chief Constable appointed Commander Mulvihill, with the approval of the ICPC, to continue the investigation. The ICPC will shortly be issuing its statutory statement on the conduct of this to the Chief Constable and complainants. As is normal the investigation file will then be sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions for consideration.

A number of additional points are worth recording. One is the Commission's helpful historical analysis of the evolution of the complaints system in Northern Ireland. Another is the decision to supervise all complaints alleging intimidation of solicitors. As we have already told the Commission, this is a sensible and helpful approach to a contentious subject. A third is the decision to take on a small number of cases concerning incivility. These may be regarded by some as less serious allegations, but to complainants they are all serious, and I think it important to audit such cases in the way the ICPC has done.

Finally, the Government echoes the concluding words of the Chairman that:

"The Commission has been variously described over the years by some as "toothless" and often as "ruthless". In fact, it has been neither."

Boundary Commission

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will announce the names of the two newly appointed members of the Northern Ireland Boundary Commission. [77927]

Marjorie Mowlam: I am pleased to announce that I have recently issued warrants of appointment for the Northern Ireland Boundary Commission to Mrs. Joan Elizabeth Ruddock and Richard McLaughlin QC. I have also been informed by the Lord Chief Justice for Northern Ireland that he has appointed hon. Mr. Justice Coghlin to the position of Deputy Chairman of the Commission.

Incontinence Beds

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many beds dealing with incontinence are available in Northern Ireland in (a) all service hospitals, (b) general hospitals, (c) specialist hospitals, (d) teaching hospitals and (e) hospitals in other categories. [77032]

Mr. McFall: The information requested is not collected.

Parades Commission

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the preliminary view of the coming year's parades is to be published by the Parades Commission; to whom the preliminary view of the coming year's parades is formally submitted; to whom the Parades Commission is formally accountable; on what parades the Parades Commission has issued a formal determination since its inception; how many parades have taken place which have contravened rulings made by the Commission; and if she will make a statement on the work of the Parades Commission over its first 12 months. [76930]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The current text of the Procedural Rules, one of the three statutory documents published under the Public Processions (Northern Ireland) Act 1998, indicates that the Commission will

"express an informal broad view of the overall pattern of parades in the areas in which they are contentious" (Procedural Rules, p1, para. 1.2).

The Commission is currently reviewing the Procedural Rules, together with the Code of Conduct and the Guidelines, in line with its statutory remit, and has issued its proposed changes to the documents in draft form for consultation. One of the proposed changes to the Procedural Rules is the removal of the requirement to make a preliminary view. In reaching its decisions in respect of contentious parades in the 1998 season, the Commission set out clearly the action it considered necessary by parties to parades disputes in order to remove the need for Commission involvement. Therefore, it considers that to issue a preliminary view in 1999 would simply be to restate what is already in the public domain.

The Chairman and his colleagues on the Commission will, of course, consider carefully the responses they receive in relation to the documents, including proposals relating to the preliminary view. The revised documents are, as the hon. Gentleman knows, subject to Parliamentary approval before publication.

In relation to accountability, the Commission was established by Parliament under the Public Processions (Northern Ireland) Act 1998 as an independent body. In addition to the statutory requirements in relation to the Code of Conduct, Procedural Rules and Guidelines, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to present to Parliament the Commission's Annual Report on the discharge of its functions for that year.

I have placed in the Library of the House a list of parades in relation to which the Parades Commission has issued a determination since receiving its statutory powers enabling it to impose conditions on parades.

Statistics on the number of parade which have contravened the Commission's rulings are not available.

Finally, I wish to congratulate the Parades Commission for their integrity and commitment over the last year. They have a difficult job and they have carried out their role in a totally fair and impartial manner in the best interests of all the people of Northern Ireland.

HEALTH

Waiting Periods (Heart Conditions)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the waiting periods for (a) angioplasty, (b) angiogram procedures and (c) heart by-pass surgery in each health trust. [74887]

Mr. Hutton: Available information on the number of patients waiting for angioplasty and heart by-pass surgery by health authority is shown in the table.

An angiogram or angiography is the main means of investigating the need for these procedures. Dye is injected into the blood stream and radiology is used to view the vessels. This is not a surgical procedure and information on waiting lists is not available centrally.

Suicide

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to raise public awareness of the rate of suicide by young men; and what support he will give to the Doctor Patient Partnership Campaign, Suicide: Helping Men Cope. [76741]

Mr. Hutton: The Department continues to work in collaboration with users of mental health services, the voluntary sector and professional bodies with a view to reducing discrimination, improving the lives of people with mental health problems and contributing to a reduction in suicide rates. We welcome the campaign launched by the Doctor Patient Partnership. This campaign complements other efforts to focus upon the mental health needs of young men, such as the Department's own helpline Campaign Against Living Miserably, launched in December 1997 in Manchester, which targets young men at the onset of depression. We regularly meet the Samaritans, who backed the Doctor Patient Partnership campaign, to look at other initiatives to reduce suicide rates in young men.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Doctor Patient Partnership's campaign Suicide: Helping Men Cope. [76577]

Mr. Hutton: We welcome the campaign launched by the Doctor Patient Partnership to reduce suicide rates among young men. It complements other efforts to focus on the mental health needs of men such as the Department's own helpline Campaign Against Living Miserably, launched in December 1997 in Manchester and aimed at young men. The Department continues to work in collaboration with users of mental health services, the voluntary sector and professional bodies with a view to reducing discrimination, improving the lives of people with mental health problems and contributing to a reduction in suicide rates.

Nurses

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many former nurses, who had been out of the profession for more than five years, have (a) been charged and (b) not been charged for back to nursing courses since his announcement that they should be provided free of charge. [76389]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The information requested is not available centrally.

Education consortiums are working with National Health Service trusts and education providers to ensure that refresher training is available free of charge to nurses seeking to return to NHS employment.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 205, concerning the Royal Commission on Long-Term Care if he will set out a timetable for his consideration of, and taking of decisions on, the Commission's recommendations. [77111]

Mr. Hutton: There is already action in hand relating to several of the Royal Commission's recommendations. Others will require fuller consideration over the coming months.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 205, concerning the special grant for carers if the remaining £424,673 will be paid in 2000–01 and 2001–02. [77112]

Mr. Hutton: Payment of allocations of a special grant to local authorities is dependent each year on Parliamentary approval. In the case of the carers' special grant, payment will, subject to approval by Parliament of the special grant report for 1999–2000, be dependent on a number of conditions including provision of an action plan and demonstration of progress on that plan. The allocations to individual local authorities of the funding of £50 million for 2000–01 and £70 million for 2001–02 will be determined according to a formula, using the most recent data available. It is therefore not possible to confirm detailed final allocations for future years at this stage.

Dental Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what changes have taken place, by health authority area, in the number of child dental registrations since June 1996; and what steps have been taken to encourage the registration of children up to five years of age with a general dental practice; [75441]

(2) what changes, by health authority area, have taken place in the number of dental registrations of (a) children and (b) adults since the introduction of the 15 month registration period. [75432]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 15 march 1999]: Information on the number of child patients registered with a General Dental Service (GDS) dentist at 30 June 1996 and 31 January 1999 by health authority (HA) in England, together with the percentage changes, has been placed in the Library.

The comparisons between June 1996 and January 1999 are affected by the reduction in the registration period to 15 months for all new registrations from September 1996 and by a reduction in the number of duplicate entries. The introduction of the Personal Dental Service (PDS) in October 1998 will also have affected figures since some GDS practices which became PDS pilots transferred their patients into the PDS.

Dentists are given monthly payments for registering children, and for children up to 5-years old these payments are higher in deprived areas to encourage dentists to register more children in these areas of high oral health need.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by health authority area, the number of dental practices (a) which accept all NHS patients, (b) whose NHS lists are closed, (c) which accept on NHS lists additional family members only and (d) which accept children for NHS treatment only if their parents are private patients. [75431]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The information requested is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of each health authority to be aware of the availability of dental services in their area.

Xenotransplantations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the independent assessors to be used to scrutinise clinical trials relating to xenotransplantation, indicating which has expertise in animal welfare issues. [76502]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 16 March 1999]: As is common practice in peer review, the names of independent external assessors appointed to advise on applications submitted to the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA), are not disclosed. As a condition of their appointment, all assessors are required to sign an undertaking confirming that they have no conflicts of interest which might affect their assessments.

Regulatory control of the welfare of animals potentially to be used as sources for xenotransplantation lies with the Home Office. A Code of Practice on the welfare of high health status pigs as xenotransplantation source animals is currently being developed by the Home Office (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. In considering any application, the UKXIRA would expect to see evidence of animal welfare standards at least equal to those to be included in the Code of Practice. However, the UKXIRA also recognises that there may be circumstances in which advice on the animal welfare aspects of specific applications is required. The appointment of appropriate assessors is currently being pursued.

North Durham Health Care NHS Trust

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to respond to the recent report on the PFI Scheme at North Durham Healthcare NHS Trust. [77987]

Mr. Denham: I have today placed copies of a response to the report in the Library.

Incontinence Beds

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds dealing with incontinence are available in England and Wales in (a) all service hospitals, (b) general hospitals, (c) specialist hospitals, (d) teaching hospitals and (e) hospitals in other categories. [77031]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available in the form requested. Bed data are collected by broad ward classification rather than by clinical specialty. The data are also collected only from National Health Service trusts and there is no split between the different types of hospitals. The publication, "Bed availability and Occupancy for England" contains information for individual NHS trusts along with summary tables for England.

Correspondence

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter of 11 January from the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton in respect of Mr. N. Peed and dentistry in Crediton. [77452]

Mr. Denham: I replied to the hon. Member on 17 March.

Clinical Negligence Costs

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority the expenditure on (a) damages for negligence and (b) out-of-court settlements for each of the last five years. [77305]

Mr. Hutton: Until recently, health authority accounts did not separate clinical negligence costs from others made under legal liability and personal injury. We cannot, therefore, give figures going back 5 years. In addition, the accounts do not distinguish between costs incurred through court awarded damages and those arising from out of court settlements. We are, however, able to give details of total clinical negligence costs by health authority (HA) for the last two years, and these are in the table.

Department of Health Annual Medical and Dental Workforce Census

Operating Department (Staff)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the possible benefits of multi-skilling for operating department practitioners and theatre nurses; and if he will make a statement. [77359]

Mr. Denham: The Department has not commissioned any specific research on this topic. National Health Service employers are encouraged to develop multi-skilled employees where this is the best way to meet health service needs.

WALES

Fur Farming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of fur farming. [76997]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are no fur farms in Wales.

The Government support the Private Member's Bill to prohibit fur farming which received its Second Reading on 5 March, and is now proceeding to Committee Stage.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Organic Farming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for organic farming in Wales. [76993]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Organic Food Sector Action Plan was launched by Mr. Gareth Rowlands, Chairman of the Organic Working Group, Mr. David Rowe-Beddoe, Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency, and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, on 8 March.

The industry-led Plan sets out an agenda for developing the organic sector in Wales, with the aim of encouraging an expansion of organic farming to 10 per cent. of the Welsh agricultural produce.

The Organic Conversion Information Service provides free advice to prospective organic farmers and the Organic Aid Scheme provides direct support for conversion. Subject to the approval of the European Commission, the new payments rates available under the Organic Aid Scheme are as follows:

£ per hectare

	APPS eligible land	Ineligible land	Unimproved grassland/ rough grazing
Year 1	225	175	25
Year 2	135	105	10
Year 3	50	40	5
Year 4	20	15	5
Year 5	20	15	5
Total	450	350	50

In future, following the transfer of functions, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance he will give to beef farmers to switch into (a) organic beef and (b) other products; and if he will make a statement. [76994]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Lamb and Beef Sector Action Plan was launched by Mr. John Lloyd Jones, Chairman of the Lamb and Beef Working Group, Mr. David Rowe-Beddoe, Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales, on 8 March. The industry-led Plan sets out an agenda for developing the Lamb and Beef sector in Wales, and the assistance that will be available to farmers.

Subject to agreement by the European Commission, the payment rate available under the Organic Aid Scheme for beef farmers converting to organic production will be increased to £350 per hectare paid over five years. The current rate is £250 per hectare in non Less Favoured Areas and £50 in Less Favoured Areas.

In future, following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the Assembly.

CAP Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect of the CAP Reform, on environmental improvement. [76996]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The new integrated rural development regulation, part of the Agenda 2000 CAP reform package agreed last week, makes it mandatory to introduce new agri-environmental schemes in all parts of all member states. In Wales, this is already in place in the form of Tir Gofal.

The regulation will also allow the UK to introduce a new scheme to replace Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances and deliver support to hill farmers more effectively while taking account of environmental protection requirements. The new scheme can be tailored to cater for differences and priorities in different areas within member states.

The creation of the new integrated rural development regulation creates a good basis on which future reforms will be able to implement a switch from supporting agricultural production to environmental measures. The current reforms have not moved very far in this regard and the significant shift to environmental measures is a matter which will have to be pressed further in reform of the CAP in future.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the recently announced Reform of the CAP and its effect on the farming community of Alyn and Deeside. [76995]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The provisional agreement reached by the Agriculture Council represents a significant change in the direction of the CAP—a direction for which the UK Government have been strongly pressing. The Welsh Office is assessing how the proposed reforms will affect farmers in Wales.

Rural Development Grants

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Round 7 EAGGF Objective 5b rural development grants have to date received matched funding. [76302]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering applications for Round 7 EAGGF Objective 5B rural development grants. Applicants will be notified shortly of decisions on their bids.

In future, following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date (i) the Welsh Office Internal Review will be completed and (ii) rural development grants will be allocated. [76303]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering the allocation of Rural Development Grants. Applicants will be notified of the decisions on their bids shortly.

In future, following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated in rural development grants in each of the last four years. [76304]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The rural development grant scheme started in the financial year 1996–97, since when £2.345m has been allocated to match projects funded under Rounds 1 to 6 of the EAGGF Objective 5b programme. The allocations for each of the years to date are:

Financial year	Allocation
1996–97	911,353
1997–98	1,209,668
1998–99	[1]224,184

[1] These projects were submitted under Round 6 and were given conditional approval in 1997–98.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has completed his consideration of the applications for Round 7 EAGGF Objective 5B rural development grants and applicants will be notified shortly of decisions on their bids.

In future, following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Foreign Workers (Rights)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce legislation restricting the rights of foreign workers to sue their employers in British courts; and what assessment he has made of the implications of such legislation in respect of trade and human rights obligations. [76998]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation restricting the rights of foreign workers to sue in the British courts.

Cabinet Office Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 724–24, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71030]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information sought regarding the expenditure incurred by my agencies and non-departmental bodies is in the table.

On behalf of my Department, £422,000 has been expended with the Central Office of Information for the production of a lay magistrates' recruitment campaign which began on 15 March 1999. This sum included national media placement in newspapers and magazines.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Data Collection

19. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent assessment he has made of the amount of administrative work required to be undertaken by teachers in connection with collecting data for his Department. [75594]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department keeps under constant review the amount of administrative work required to be undertaken by teachers.

National Grid for Learning

20. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of the National Grid for Learning. [75595]

Mr. Mudie: Plans for the National Grid for Learning are developing towards achievement of the targets announced in the National Grid for Learning Challenge "Open for Learning, Open for Business", launched in November 1998 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Over £700 million will be allocated for schools purchase of ICT networking and infrastructure by the year 2002. This funding will enable all schools to be connected to the grid by 2002, and will provide them with on-line access to a wide range of educational and managerial resources.

The Department published last year the results of a survey of ICT provision in schools, which indicated that 17 per cent. of primary schools and 83 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet by March 1998. This is in comparison to the previous year's survey (published in 1997), which indicated that 5 per cent. of primary schools and 47 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet at that time. Subsequent annual surveys will indicate the growth of schools with such connections. The latest estimates are that approximately 30 per cent. of primary schools, 90 per cent. of secondary schools and 45 per cent. of special schools in England may currently have some form of Internet access. The Government are committed to ensuring that all schools are connected to the Internet by 2002.

Employment Statistics

21. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently in employment in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [75596]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Over 27¼ million people, the highest on record.

SSA Formula

22. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the education element of the SSA formula. [75597]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government will not seek to change the system of calculating standard spending assessments for the three years up to 2001–02. It will, nevertheless, be subject to review. Ministers at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will take the lead. This will involve local government representation and Ministers with local government service interests.

Education (Financing)

23. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he last met the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals to discuss the financing of education. [75598]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had a useful meeting with the CVCP yesterday. The discussion ranged widely over a number of issues, including funding for higher education.

Numeracy Hour

24. Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in implementing the numeracy hour in primary schools. [75599]

Ms Estelle Morris: Daily dedicated mathematics lessons will formally begin in primary schools this September. In practice many schools have already introduced them, alongside the literacy hour. Earlier this week, schools received copies of a teaching framework designed to support the introduction of the mathematics session.

New Deal (Education and Training)

25. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the education and training options of the new deal. [75600]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Views on the education and training options offered under the New Deal are regularly received from a wide variety of education and training bodies, including Further Education Colleges, TECs and private training providers.

Disability Rights Commission

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in establishing the Disability Rights Commission. [75601]

Ms Hodge: Subject to Parliament enacting the Disability Rights Commission Bill, which was introduced into another place on 3 December 1998, we expect the Commission to be established in April 2000. Initial planning for the establishment of the Commission has begun. However, much of the work cannot commence until after Royal Assent of the Bill and the Chairman, Chief Executive and Commissioners have been appointed. We intend to make these appointments as soon as practicable after Royal Assent.

Personal Job Accounts

27. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce personal job accounts for the unemployed. [75602]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson), Official Report, column 1254.

New Deal (Young People)

28. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress with the new deal for the young unemployed. [75603]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for young people has made an encouraging start since its national roll-out in April 1998. The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of December 1998, and provisional Management Information to the end of January 1999, show that in Great Britain over 231,000 young people have already joined New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds. Of these 43,330 have found unsubsidised employment, 15,170 subsidised employment and 49,590 have joined one of the other three options.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the numbers of young people who have joined the New Deal. [75579]

Mr. Blunkett: The latest figures to the end of January show that 231,740 young people have joined the New Deal.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent to date on (a) subsidies, (b) allowances and (c) administration for the new deal for young people. [77181]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Maclean, dated 18 March 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about how much has been spent on subsidies, allowances and administration for the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

To the end of February, £16.2m has been brought to account on employment subsidies for young people and £28.6m on allowances for those participating in the training and work experience options under the programme. The cost so far of implementing and managing New Deal has been £146.1m. This includes the initial expenditure on marketing, premises and IT equipment to establish the New Deal in its first year. All of these figures exclude the cost of payments to providers of New Deal.

I hope this is helpful.

Administrative Burdens (Schools)

29. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding administrative burdens on schools; and if he will make a statement. [75604]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have met a wide range of teachers and organisations representing teachers over the past two years, and administrative burdens on schools were discussed at several of those meetings. We also answer many letters on the subject.

In all of these meetings and correspondence, we have made it clear that we recognise the need to keep unnecessary burdens on teachers to a minimum to enable them to focus on raising standards. We have been working vigorously to do so and set out much of the detail of that work during the Opposition day debate on the subject on 2 March.

Oversubscribed Schools

30. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made in enabling oversubscribed schools (a) to take in more pupils and (b) to keep their class sizes down. [75605]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are allocating over £150 million of funding for 1999/2000 to reduce infant class sizes for 5, 6 and 7-year-olds. This will enable over 1,600 popular schools to increase their intakes. The number of pupils in infant classes of over 30 will also fall from around 485,000 in January 1998 to under 200,000 in September 1999.

New Deal (Statistics)

31. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people have obtained employment through the new deal to date. [75606]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figure to the end of December 1998, and provisional Management Information to the end of January 1999, show that 58,500 young people have already found employment through or with the help of the New Deal initiative.

New Deal (Disabled People)

33. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support and advice is given by new deal advisers to disabled people seeking employment. [75608]

Ms Hodge: People with disabilities who are eligible for New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds and those over the age of 25 receive the same range of support as other participants in these age groups. Those who would benefit from more specialist help and advice receive support from an Employment Service Disability Employment Adviser, who can offer access to the full range of disability programmes. In addition, New Deal for Disabled People offers those claiming Incapacity Benefit a client-focused service based on individual requirements and access to an extensive range of specialist disabled programmes.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of December 1998 show that 13 per cent. of those who joined New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds and 19 per cent. of those who joined the New Deal for the 25-plus age group are recorded by the Employment Service as having a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities.

Child Care Information Services

34. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on the development of child care information services. [75609]

Ms Hodge: Good progress is being made to develop Children's Information Services that meet local needs. Partnerships in every area are developing information services, which will be supported by a joint project between the Department and the Department of Social Security to set up local internet-linked databases.

Students (Hardship)

35. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the extent of hardship among students. [75610]

Mr. Mudie: The most recent Student Income and Expenditure Survey for the academic year 1995–96 found no evidence of widespread student hardship. The next survey is now under way for the 1998–99 academic year.

We have uprated students' total resources for 1999–2000 in line with forecast inflation, thus protecting their value in real terms. We have almost doubled the Access Funds to £44 million and have made hardship loans available for new students.

School Governing Bodies

36. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on (a) school costs and (b) school administration of the new provisions for additional parent representatives on school governing bodies. [75611]

Ms Estelle Morris: Most schools will have to recruit only one more parent governor, and the value of additional parent representation should more than outweigh the cost of recruitment.

Class Sizes

37. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the implementation of the Government's policy to reduce class sizes to below 30 for five, six and seven-year-olds. [75612]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are providing a total of £620 million to enable the limit to be met ahead of schedule. The £150 million allocation we have announced for 1999–2000, which will provide an extra 2,500 teachers and build over 1,000 extra classrooms next year, will reduce the number of pupils in infant classes from 485,000 in January 1998 to fewer than 200,000 pupils in September 1999. The limit will be achieved in full in September 2001, ahead of our pledge to the electorate.

38. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received on classroom sizes. [75613]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has received just one representation as part of our autumn 1998 review of The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996.

New Deal (Staff)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many extra staff have been taken on by the Employment Service to administer the new deal and at what cost; and how many of those were taken on under the new deal scheme itself. [77182]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Maclean, dated 18 March 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about how many extra staff have been taken on by the Employment Service to administer the New Deal and at what cost; and how many of those were taken under the New Deal scheme itself. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Currently, there are some 3,500 Personal Advisers in the Employment Service working on the New Deals for young and older unemployed people, for Lone Parents and for people with disabilities, the great majority of whom have been recruited from within the Service. In addition many other staff are involved to some degree as part of their normal jobs in the support or management of New Deal programmes. Over the past year total staffing in the Employment Service has risen from around 34,000 to 36,000 reflecting the increasing demands on the Service as a whole, having reduced from a peak of over 50,000 in 1993–94.

As part of the overall increase in staffing over the past year, the Employment Service has so far recruited 289 young people through the New Deal, of whom a number are involved in New Deal support functions.

I hope this is helpful.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76174]

Mr. Mudie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 651.

Pupil Funding

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding has been provided per pupil in each type of school in Stoke-on-Trent over the last two years; and what is the planned allocation for each of the next three years. [76279]

Ms Estelle Morris: Funding per pupil at different types of school ultimately depends on decisions taken by Stoke-on-Trent local education authority in allocating its budget under fair funding. The following table sets out the education SSA per pupil allowances for Stoke-on-Trent over the last two years and the amount the authority will receive in 1999–2000. It is too soon to say what the amounts might be in 2000–01 and beyond. In addition, pupils in Stoke-on-Trent in 1999–2000 have benefited from £5,486,000 in the Standards Fund and £1,530,000 for capital.

Year	Primary	Year-on-year increase	Secondary	Year-on-year increase
1997–98	2,043	—	2,692	—
1998–99	2,155	112 (5.5%)	2,818	125 (4.6%)
1999–2000	2,281	125 (5.8%)	2,940	123 (4.4%)

School Inspectors

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will provide a breakdown of the ethnic origins of inspectors carrying out Ofsted inspections of schools in each of the last three years; [77207]

(2) what training is provided by Ofsted for inspectors carrying out inspections of schools; [77208]

(3) what procedures Ofsted uses to monitor how many of its inspectors have experience of work in areas with significant ethnic minority communities. [77209]

Ms Estelle Morris: These are matters for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools and I have therefore asked Chris Woodhead to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Employment Zones

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employment zones have been established to date; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness. [76434]

Mr. Andrew Smith: To date, five prototype Employment Zones have been established in Glasgow, Liverpool and Sefton, North-West Wales, Plymouth and South Tees. Three smaller projects are also underway in Birmingham and Solihull, Wembley and Doncaster and Wakefield.

The effectiveness of the prototypes is constantly being reviewed and evaluated. A qualitative evaluation is being undertaken jointly by Manchester and Leeds Metropolitan Universities and a quantitative survey is planned to run from May 1999 to June 1999. The outcome of the evaluation will be published at the end of the year.

The lessons learned from the prototypes will feed into the framework for fully fledged Employment Zones, which will run on the personal job account model from April 2000.

Single Currency

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the subject areas within his Department's responsibilities which will be covered by the information campaign on Britain's membership of a single currency. [73666]

Mr. Mudie: Her Majesty's Treasury will continue its dialogue with key external bodies to determine what information the public and business would need at each stage of the changeover process. Any information campaign would cover key concerns that the public and business may have. Chapter eight of HMT's "Outline National Changeover Plan" provides further information. Copies of the Plan are available in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to issue information from his Department to help the public make an informed decision when they vote on the single currency. [73589]

Mr. Mudie: Any plans by the Government to issue information during a referendum campaign on whether or not the UK should join the single currency would be made in light of the Government's response to the recommendations from the Neill Committee on the conduct of referendums. The Government will announce their conclusions on those recommendations when my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary publishes a White paper and draft Bill before the summer recess.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the financial assistance given to Turkey by his Department in each of the last three years, stating (a) the amount of funding, (b) the projects for which the funding was allocated and (c) what supervision his Department conducted on the development of these projects. [74638]

Ms Quin: The information is as follows:

	FY 98–99	FY 97–98	FY 96–97
Sponsored visits from Turkey to the UK	18,927	12,818	unavailable
Chevening Scholarships for Turkish students	230,146	123,214	58,000
Police training (under the ASSIST scheme, previously UKMTAS)	[1]43,460	0	0
Command programme budgets (including training, environmental and human rights projects)	[2]91,880	27,375	25,678
Human Rights Project Fund (established 1998)	[1]65,700	—	—

[1] Provisional
[2] Provisional figures including funding allocated in 1997–98 but dispersed in 1998–99 or not yet dispersed

All applications for financing projects under the Human Rights Project Fund, the Command Programme Budgets and ASSIST are considered against a range of criteria, which themselves derive from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Objectives.

Projects once authorised are subject to supervision by the Embassy in Akara. The Embassy provides reports to relevant FCO departments on projects as they develop and assessments of projects on completion.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76177]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, Official Report, 16 March 1999, columns 651–52.

European Commission Funding

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the position of his Department on the amendment to European Communities budget line B3–306 proposed by the Commission, to remove reference to any prohibition on these funds being used for propaganda purposes; what representations he made on the issue; and what assessment he has made of alternative uses for the funds. [76276]

Ms Quin: The notes in the EC Budget have no legal status and are indicative only. Under Article 205, the Commission retains the obligation to implement the budget as adopted on its own authority. The notes are proposed by the Commission and amended by either arm of the budgetary authority (Council or European Parliament). For non-compulsory expenditure, as in the case of this budget line, the Parliament has the final say.

The Government believe that information spending from the Community budgets should not be used for propaganda, but should contribute to increased transparency and understanding of the EU, its activities, its structure and its functions, by the citizen. This is a view shared by the Commission.

James Miles and Paul Loseby

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact there has been between his Department and the parents of Paul Loseby and James Miles since 1 January 1999. [76427]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1 January, consular staff have been in frequent contact with the parents of Paul Loseby and James Miles.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the legislative steps required to enable citizens of Gibraltar to vote in elections of the European Parliament. [76638]

Ms Quin: Extension of the European Parliamentary franchise to Gibraltar will require amendment of the 1976 EC Act on Direct Elections. This will require the agreement of all EU Member States. HMG will seek such an amendment in the current negotiations in Brussels on establishing Common Principles for EP Elections. Once an amendment Act is agreed, it will require ratification in all Member States. We will also need to amend UK domestic legislation.

Travel (Millennium Date Change)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to inform the public about the potential problems associated with (a) travelling, (b) living and (c) doing business overseas during the millennium date-change period. [77195]

Mr. Fatchett: We are issuing two sets of advice about potential Millennium Bug disruptions overseas. The first will alert British nationals who plan to travel, or will be resident overseas in the period late 1999 to early 2000 to the problem. The second will address the possible international consequences of the Millennium Bug for British businesses. Copies of these advice notices have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Rambouillet

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the response of his Department to the letter of 5 March from the Serbian presidency on Rambouillet. [77155]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Officials discussed the issues raised in the letter with the Yugoslav Ambassador on 8 March. They made it clear that the Rambouillet agreement was a fair and balanced text, following extensive consultations with both sides. The Contact Group was not now prepared to renegotiate the text.

The officials also pointed out that the Serbian delegation at Rambouillet had agreed to discuss the scope and character of an international presence in Kosovo necessary to implement the agreement.

Democratic Countries

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries that Her Majesty's Government classes as democratic. [77435]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The large majority of states now, at least in principle, aspire to democratic government. But this involves much more than just holding free and fair elections. Transparent and accountable government, freedom of expression and association, and the rule of law are also essential to genuine democracy. Rather than producing league tables, which are liable to be misleading, we are working, through political pressure and practical assistance, to promote the establishment and strengthening of such democratic systems around the world.

Ambassadors for British Business

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the visits undertaken by each business ambassador. [77341]

Mr. Fatchett: The Ambassadors for British Business have participated in more than 120 events in 35 countries. The visits undertaken by each of the Ambassadors for British Business are listed.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the cost to public funds of the business ambassador scheme. [77342]

Mr. Fatchett: The Ambassadors for British Business meet their own travel and accommodation costs on their overseas trips. There are some administrative costs to the department in staff time and for the initial meeting and follow up reception in London. In addition our Ambassadors at overseas posts sometimes make use of their entertainment budgets to host an event in connection with the scheme.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many business ambassadors there are currently. [77340]

Mr. Fatchett: There are currently 36 Ambassadors for British Business. They include the Chairman or Chief Executive of some of Britain's largest and internationally successful companies and represent a wide cross-section of the British private sector.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the role of Ambassadors for British Business will change following the creation of British Trade International; and what changes there have been in the list of these ambassadors in the past year. [77551]

Mr. Fatchett: The Ambassadors for British Business scheme will be administered by British Trade International. There will be no change in the role of the Ambassadors for British Business.

There have been two deletions to the list during the past year; Mr. James Leek, McLeod Russel Holdings plc, in June 1998 and Lord Sainsbury in July 1998 when he became a member of the Government.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the explanation given to the UN by the Iraqis for the non-distribution of $275 million worth of medicinal supplies; and what reports he has received concerning incomplete apparatus and quality control tests on these supplies. [77254]

Mr. Fatchett: I share my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's assessment, as set out in the answer of 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 573, of the Iraqi memorandum about the non-distribution of $275m worth of medical supplies. It is an unconvincing attempt by Iraq to divert responsibility for the distribution problems in the centre and south on to others. In the northern governorates, where distribution is carried out by UN agencies, no problems in the distribution of medical goods were noted in the UN Secretary-General's report.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the British delegation at the UN has taken to implement UN resolutions in regard to the children in Iraq. [77327]

Mr. Fatchett: HMG has always worked to ensure that UN Security Council resolutions on Iraq are implemented. We were at the forefront of efforts to introduce the UN "oil for food" humanitarian programme and continue to do all we can to help the Iraqi people. Recently, the UK mission has been working at the UN to press Iraq to prioritise contracts effectively, so that the food and health needs of the Iraqi people, including vulnerable groups such as infants, are put first. They have, for example, raised concerns that Iraq has not so far submitted contracts to the Sanctions Committee for high protein biscuits (for pregnant and lactating mothers) and has submitted contracts for only $1.5 million (out of $8.7 million) for high protein milk for infants.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the killing by Western aircraft of an oil-for-food programme monitor. [77358]

Mr. Fatchett: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the basis is in international law for the concept of no-fly zones. [77354]

Mr. Fatchett: The No Fly Zones were established in April 1991 and August 1992 in support of UN Security Council resolution 688 which called on Iraq to end its repression of the civilian population. The No Fly Zones are justified under international law in response to a situation of overwhelming humanitarian necessity.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has obtained on the categories of information exchanged between the US and UNSCOM. [77260]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 8 March 1999, Official Report, column 15, and the answer I gave him on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 181.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about possible external involvement in the murder of Ayatollah Muhammed Saddiq al-Sadr at Najaf. [77253]

Mr. Fatchett: We have seen press reports that the Government of Iraq have blamed external forces for the murder of Ayatollah al-Sadr. But others, including credible Iraqi Shia sources, hold the Iraqi regime responsible for the assassination. The UN Special Rapporteur previously expressed his fears that such killings formed part of a systematic attack on the independent leadership of Shia muslims in Iraq. We urge the Iraqi authorities to conduct a full investigation into al-Sadr's death and bring the perpetrators to justice.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons (a) disinfectant and (b) coffins are included in UN sanctions on Iraq. [77328]

Mr. Fatchett: Under the UN "oil for food" programme, Iraq is allowed to import goods for essential civilian needs, such as disinfectant and coffins.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the supply of radiotherapy equipment, chemotherapy drugs and analgesics to Iraq has been blocked by British advisers. [77255]

Mr. Fatchett: 96 per cent. of the contracts submitted by Iraq to the Security Council under the UN "oil for food" programme have been approved. The majority of holds are put in place because paperwork is either incorrect or insufficient. The UK currently has holds on six contracts for medical supplies because the full details required by the UN have not been provided (and in one case because the contract is illegible). I can assure my hon. Friend that the equipment and drugs he specifies do not feature on any of these contracts.

Overseas Trade Services

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the overseas trade services provided to companies in the last year to which figures are available together with the revenue received by his Department (a) by service and (b) by company. [77489]

Mr. Fatchett: 5,179 chargeable export services were performed for UK companies during financial year 1997–98 yielding a total of £1.23 million. This revenue accrues to the Department of Trade and Industry. These services fall into two main categories: Tailored Market Information, which can include basic market information, identification and assessment of potential agents/ distributors, market assessments for a company's product or service, advice on a company's market approach and general information on local investment opportunities; and Commercial Publicity Services. To provide a breakdown of the services provided to individual companies during this period would involve disproportionate cost.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Central Asia

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she has taken to encourage British business to enter into joint ventures and invest in Central Asia. [63546]

Clare Short: An important element of the White Paper's objective of reducing global poverty, is socially responsible partnership with British Business. In Central Asia, we are hoping to work with British Gas. Through a special scheme, we have helped British companies investigate investment opportunities. Our main programmes of assistance in these countries necessarily focus on supporting their transition (to market economies and pluralist democracies) in an equitable and sustainable manner. To this end, in Central Asia we are working with governments to tackle agriculture and health reform, whilst at the same time also helping build civil society.

Zimbabwe

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current status of the organisational development project with the Zimbabwe Republic police. [77247]

Clare Short: The project was approved in December 1996. It aims to provide efficient and accountable police services to the people of Zimbabwe, especially the poor and disadvantaged. Recent reviews by the Department for International Development indicate that the project is making good progress and is likely to achieve its aim. The Zimbabwe Republic Police are already working more closely with local communities in the planning and delivery of improved police services.

Nigeria

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she next plans to visit Nigeria. [76966]

Clare Short: I have no firm plans to visit Nigeria but would aim to do so if a visit would help take forward a Nigerian programme to reduce poverty.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will meet Karol Sikora, Chief of the WHO Cancer Programme and Professor of International Cancer Medicine, to discuss the cancer situation in Iraq. [77256]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development has not been asked to meet Karol Sikora, but my officials are in contact with WHO about the health care needs of Iraqi people, including cancer. Discussions are at an early stage, but we hope they will lead to a joint project.

Organisation of African Unity

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will place a copy of the agreement made in February 1999 between her Department and the Organisation of African Unity in the Library. [77490]

Clare Short: In February the Department for International Development entered into an agreement with the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) to provide initial support to their Conflict Management Centre as part of a longer term partnership approach to building OAU capacity in the area of conflict prevention and peace-building. This initiative is part of our conflict reduction strategy: specifically our aim to support the role of regional and sub regional organisations in conflict prevention.

We are providing USD 515,800, equivalent to approximately £320,000, over 20 months for human resource capacity building in the OAU Conflict Management Centre. Our contribution covers recruitment and salary costs for 4 advisers—i.e., one senior political officer and three regional desk officers—who will be contracted by the OAU for a period of 18 months. In addition, we are providing technical advice to assist in completion of the OAU Conflict Management Centre's Capacity Building Programme document which will be presented to OAU Member States and potential funding partners.

A copy of the exchange of letters with the Organisation of African Unity, including the Project Memorandum for the Capacity Building Programme, which constitutes our agreement with them will be placed in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

European Structural Funds

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times (a) he and (b) his officials have met Welsh Office (i) Ministers and (ii) officials within the last six weeks to discuss matched funding for (1) Objective 1 and (2) Objective 2 in Wales. [76902]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Ministers and officials are in regular dialogue on all matters of policy.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken (a) nationally and (b) internationally to avert a liquidity crisis in the event of the millennium non-compliance of computer systems. [76058]

Mrs. Roche: The best way to proceed is for financial institutions to achieve a high degree of Year 2000 compliance. The primary responsibility for achieving that lies with the industry. The Financial Services Authority regards this as a major supervisor priority and has made it clear that firms which fail to implement appropriate measures face regulatory intervention. The Bank of England has been making strenuous efforts to ensure that payment and settlement systems are well prepared. The UK financial services sector is generally regarded as a leader in working towards Year 2000 preparedness.

Internationally, there are a number of groups working on increasing awareness and promoting preparedness, including the Joint Year 2000 Council of the international regulatory organisations, on which the FSA is represented.

ECOFIN

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 15 March; and if he will make a statement. [77267]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor and I attended the Economic and Financial Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 15 March 1999.

There was a discussion of both expenditure and resources under Agenda 2000, which led to Presidency conclusions. These noted that while Ministers favoured the maintenance of the compromise package for agriculture, there was "broad support" for measures to reduce its budgetary cost.

The Commission and the Chairman of the Economic and Finance Committee presented draft Opinions on the Stability programmes of Spain, Germany, Belgium, France and Luxembourg. The Council adopted the Opinions on each.

There was an orientation debate on the structural aspects of the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines, based on preparatory reports by the Commission and the Economic Policy Committee. These analyse Member States' assessments of their product, capital and labour markets which were produced in response to a request by the Cardiff European Council

The President of the Court of Auditors, Mr. Jan Karlsson, introduced the report of the Court of Auditors for 1997. The Council adopted a recommendation for the discharge of the 1997 Budget.

The Council adopted conclusions calling for a strengthening of the fight against fraud.

The Commission presented its Communication to the Council on Duty Free in response to a remit from Vienna European Council which was published very recently. No decision was taken.

The Council noted an interim report by the Presidency of discussions of the draft directive on the taxation of energy products and invited the Committee of Permanent Representatives to continue its work.

The Commission presented a proposal for an optional, experimental and time limited reduced rate of VAT on labour intensive services, in response to a request from the Vienna European Council.

Flexible Mortgages

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has taken to encourage the provision of flexible mortgages; and if he will make a statement. [77012]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 16 March 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

In meetings and other engagements, I have encouraged mortgage lenders to develop and market more mortgage products with flexible repayment arrangements. My Department is continuing to pursue this through discussions with lenders and insurers aimed at providing better protection for home buyers.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71468]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communication Service (GICS) are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the working guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) average and (b) longest waiting time for each accident and emergency department in Scotland in each year since 1996. [74513]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 10 March 1999]: Centrally held information on waiting times in Accident and Emergency (A&E) Departments is derived from a series of week-long surveys of patients carried out in the 32 A&E Departments across Scotland.

Data at the level of detail requested are not held centrally. Information on the median and the time which 95 per cent. of patients waited from arrival at A&E to completion of treatment, since 1996, is provided in the table. Information on the Accident and Emergency Surveys is published annually in Scottish Health Statistics, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many written representations the Scottish Office has received which support assisted area status funding for the Falkirk Council area. [75928]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 17 March 1999]: Some 26 written representations in support of the continuing designation of the Falkirk area as an Assisted Area have now been received by The Scottish Office. Comments have been made on the criteria which might be used in designating the new Assisted Areas and the geographical units which could be employed, and all such representations, of course, imply support for regional aid towards investment assistance to industry to continue to be made available. The main form of this aid is currently Regional Selective Assistance, which may only be granted in the Assisted Areas.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the written representations received by the Scottish Office regarding the allocation of assisted area status funds in Scotland following the current review. [75927]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 17 March 1999]: No such representations have been received.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Scottish Office has made to the Department of Trade and Industry in relation to the review of assisted area status. [75925]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 17 March 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry is conducting the review of the GB Assisted Areas map jointly with The Scottish Office and other Government Departments.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recommendations the Scottish Office has made to the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the allocation of assisted area status funds in Scotland following the current review. [75926]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 17 March 1999]: None. The overall level of investment assistance to industry in the designated Assisted Areas of Scotland, primarily through the operation of the Regional Selective Assistance scheme, is met from the Scottish Block.

Royal Commission on Long-term Care

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of implementing paragraph 6.53 of the report by the Royal Commission on Long-term Care (a) to the Scottish Executive and (b) to local authorities. [75493]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 10 March 1999]: Paragraph 6.53 of the Royal Commission report recommends that personal care should be free both in residential settings and at home and estimates the UK cost at £1.12 billion. The approximate Scottish share of this total, based on the proportion of people over 65 living in Scotland, would be £94.4 million.

We are undertaking work at present to refine this figure further to take into account the differences in relative wealth, cost of residential and home based care and service provision in Scotland.

From 1 July 1999, these matters will be for the Scottish Parliament.

Care and Repair Grants

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 133, on care and repair grants, if he will break down the sum spent from revenue funding in 1997–98 by local authority. [76373]

Mr. Macdonald: The total value of works completed in 1997–98 was around £6 million, covering some 1,400 homes. Revenue funding in 1997–98 amounted to £1.2 million. Scottish Homes and Local Authorities normally fund the revenue costs on a 50/50 basis. However, the break-down by local authority is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the pupil-to-teacher ratios were in Scottish (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools for (i) 1998–99 and (ii) the four previous years. [76243]

Mrs. Liddell: The available information is set out in the table.

Information on their current salaries will not be available centrally until colleges 1998–99 annual accounts are submitted next year. The remuneration (including benefits-in-kind, taxable expense allowances and bonuses) of Principals for 1997–98, as shown in the colleges 1997–98 accounts, is as follows:

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory provisions require an education authority to provide a relevant education service for an individual child with autistic spectrum disorder; and if he will make a statement. [76404]

Mrs. Liddell: Education authorities have a duty under section 1 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to secure the adequate and efficient provision of school education for the children in their area, including children with special educational needs. This includes children with autistic spectrum disorders.

The Government are implementing a number of measure, announced in November 1998, to assist authorities to improve provision for children with special educational needs. This includes increased investment of £2.5 million per year in in-service development and training for staff working with children with special educational needs, including those with autism.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76172]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 65, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office.

Agri-Environment Programme

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Agri-Environment Programme. [76364]

Mr. Macdonald: The number of participants in the Scottish Agri-Environment Programme is increasing and we have responded by making extra resources available. Expenditure was £9.7 million in 1997–98 and is planned to reach £13 million this year and £22 million by 2001–02. A number of improvements to existing schemes are planned for this year and a new all-Scotland scheme is on course for introduction during the Spring of 2000 under Agenda 2000.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Infective Salmon Anaemia

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to seek recategorisation of infective salmon anaemia as a List 3 disease. [76214]

Mr. Macdonald: None. We remain committed to the eradication of infectious salmon anaemia from our waters.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to promote vaccination of salmon against infective salmon anaemia. [76211]

Mr. Macdonald: Vaccination against infectious salmon anaemia is not compatible with our strategy of eradication and is not permitted by EC and domestic legislation.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants in his Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in his Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76801]

Mr. Dewar: 36 staff have signed an agreement to disapply the 48-hour limit. Two staff have declined.

The standard terms and conditions of service for staff employed by the Scottish Office are well within the limits set by the Working Time Regulations. Compliance costs are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average waiting times for each health board for (a) knee and (b) hip joint replacement operations for September (i) 1992, (ii) 1993, (iii) 1994, (iv) 1995 and (v) 1996. [76152]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The mean waiting time for knee and hip joint replacement operations by Health Board for the years ending 30 September for the period requested, is provided in the table.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the salaries (a) with and (b) without pension contributions for the Chief Executive and Chair of each NHS trust in Scotland for each year since 1992–93. [76115]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The information requested is published and can be obtained from the individual trust Annual Report. Chief Executives who are members of the NHS pension scheme pay the same rate of contribution as other NHS staff.

The level of remuneration paid to Chairmen of NHS Trusts is determined by legislation and has been unchanged since 1992. The payments made, which are not eligible for pension contribution, are set out in the attached table according to the financial year in which the Trust was established.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Galbraith: The information is set out in the table. Health Board Accounts detail claims abandoned into three categories: (1) Private Accommodation, (2) Road Traffic Acts and (3) Other. All items entered in these three categories are regarded as bad debts.

NHS Surplus Properties

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the last 10 years how much money was raised from the sale of surplus properties in the NHS; if he will estimate the amount to be raised in the next 10 years and what use has been made of the proceeds of these sales. [77142]

Mr. Galbraith: Information is not held centrally on the disposal proceeds of surplus properties but the NHSiS has raised the sums in the table over the last 10 years from the sale of surplus land, buildings, vehicles and equipment.

All sale proceeds have been used for the benefit of the NHSiS by augmenting the public and private sector capital available to the Service.

Estimates of receipt proceeds for the next 10 years are not available. However the recent NHSiS capital planning exercise estimated receipts of the magnitude detailed in the table for the current year and the next five years. These receipts are from all asset disposals and again will be used to benefit the NHSiS.

Airports and Air Services

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what progress has been made on the study of the economic impact of regional airports and regional air services announced in "A New Deal for Transport"; when these studies will be completed in Scotland; and if he will make a statement; [76987]

(2) what plans he has (a) to approve and (b) to initiate developments relating to airports before the completion of the economic impact studies covering airports and air services announced in "A New Deal for Transport"; and if he will make a statement. [76988]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Airports and Air Services Study was commissioned in November 1998 by The Scottish Office and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Study is being undertaken by Environmental Resources Management. An extensive consultation exercise is under way and a Reference Group has been established to provide a forum for particularly interested parties to contribute. Seminars are being held in Edinburgh (29 March) and Inverness (30 March) to widen debate.

The Study is intended to inform policy on meeting future demand for sustainable air travel and to consider the economics and costs of providing improve airport facilities. The consultants will report in July 1999.

My right hon. Friend has no plans, however, to initiate airport development and has received no approaches to approve such developments at the major airports in central Scotland. Developments at airports operated by the Government owned company, Highlands & Islands Airports Limited, will take place as required to meet operational needs.

From 1 July 1999, development of airports will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Reforestation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the acreage of reforestation undertaken in the United Kingdom during each of the last three years; and if he will list the areas of the country where this has taken place. [77002]

Mr. Macdonald: The area of woodland planted in the United Kingdom by, or with the aid of grants from, the Forestry Commission or the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, is given in the table, broken down by country. Trees have been planted in almost all parts of the United Kingdom and a more detailed list is not available.

Local Authority Budgets

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the Scottish Office budget foreach local authority in Scotland in cash terms and at 1998–99 prices for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what is his estimate for (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [76865]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Each local authority in Scotland is responsible for setting its own budget. The Scottish Office provides funding to authorities through Aggregate External Finance (AEF) in support of their net current expenditure. The table shows AEF funding at cash and constant 1998–99 prices by local authority for 1995–96 to 1999–2000. The distribution of AEF at a local authority level for 2000–01 and 2001–02 is not yet decided, but overall support for local authority expenditure for each of these years is planned to increase by 3.0 per cent. and 2.7 per cent. respectively.

New Deal (Gateway)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage level of attendance by trainees in Scotland at the Gateway stage of the New Deal. [77419]

Mr. Dewar: Of the 22,652 young people who started the New Deal in Scotland for the period to the end of December 1998, a total of 21,125 (93.3%) attended their first interview and entered the Gateway stage of the New Deal.

Children's Hearings

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on implementing measures to improve the throughput of cases entering the children's hearing system; and if he will make a statement. [78045]

Mr. Galbraith: Following receipt of the "Just In Time" report in December 1997, I asked Mrs. Sally Kuenssberg, Chairman of the Scottish Children's Reporter Administration to re-form her working group to consider with the agencies concerned how best to implement the report's recommendations.

At my request, Mrs. Kuenssberg's group has now produced a blueprint to apply to all relevant agencies. It consists of a code of practice and comprehensive standards and targets for the handling of all cases referred to the hearings system, whether on grounds of offending or care and protection. I have endorsed the Blueprint which is published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries.

The care of our children, especially those at risk, is of greatest importance. Effective and early action in co-ordinated working for children and families is widely recognised as beneficial. I am determined to see improvements in services for children and families. This blueprint offers a systematic and innovative approach to tackling both quality and timing issues.

I have been very encouraged by the wide measure of support for the principles and practical measures contained within the blueprint and now look to the agencies concerned to take forward its introduction. The targets will be a challenge for some and progress towards achieving them will secure improvements over current arrangements. The key to successful introduction and further progress on the Blueprint depends on the active co-operation between the agencies to improve the delivery of their service. The blueprint paves the way for this and I look to Chief Executives and senior managers to take action to monitor its implementation and development within their agencies.

I have asked Sally Kuenssberg's group to continue to meet periodically to assess progress and, in the light of experience, where standards and targets might be reviewed and improved upon.

From 1 July 1999, this will become a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Incontinence Beds

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds dealing with incontinence are available in Scotland in (a) all service hospitals, (b) general hospitals, (c) specialist hospitals, (d) teaching hospitals and (e) hospitals in other categories. [77009]

Mr. Galbraith: It is not possible to say how many beds are available for dealing with incontinence in Scotland, as most treatment is now carried out on an out-patient basis by specialist nurses and physiotherapists. Patients rarely require in-patient treatment for incontinence per se, but may require to be admitted for treatment of the underlying cause of the incontinence. The causes of incontinence are wide ranging, and treatment therefore takes place in many different settings. Beds are not specifically set aside for treatment of incontinence, in the same way as they are not specifically set aside for many other conditions.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the present distribution of recipients of widow's benefits by income decile, distinguishing between those receiving widow's pension and those receiving Widowed Mothers Allowance. [76134]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 597–98. Information on Widowed Mothers Allowance is not available.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the proportion of recipients of Widowed Mothers Allowance who are in receipt of occupational pension payments and (b) their distribution areas on the overall income range and across weekly incomes in the form set out in paragraph 13 and paragraph 14 of his consultation paper on bereavement support. [76104]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available as information on current Widowed Mothers Allowance recipients in receipt of Occupational Pensions is not available because the sample sizes involved are too small to allow a robust analysis.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of extending the bereavement payment to those bereaved people of pension age who are also in receipt of Income Support. [76449]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 12 March 1999]: It is estimated that extending eligibility for the Bereavement Payment would increase expenditure by up to £60 million for pensioners receiving Income Support (IS) in households in 2001–02.

Note:

This excludes IS pensioners who are in, or whose partners are in, residential care and nursing homes.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of respondents to the Green Paper, "Support in Bereavement", expressed opposition to the replacement of widow's pension with a time-limited bereavement allowance; and what proportion expressed support. [77300]

Angela Eagle: Of the 80 responses to the Support in Bereavement Green Paper received, 28 respondents expressed opposition to the principle of replacing Widows' Pension with a time-limited Bereavement Allowance. 5 respondents expressed support of this specific aspect of the proposals.

Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76462]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76822]

Mr. Timms: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, the special advisers from this Department have made one visit overseas in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will breakdown the total of one in three persons living in households claiming at least one major means-tested benefit by the type of benefit claimed. [76208]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 12 March 1999]: This Department's latest estimates do not suggest a total of one in three persons living in households claiming at least one major means-tested benefit.

Number of people claiming means-tested benefits as percentage of total population

Benefit(s)	Number of people as percentage of total population
Housing Benefit only	1
Council Tax Benefit only	3
Income Support only	3
Family Credit only	0
Housing Benefit and Family Credit only	—

Number of people claiming means-tested benefits as percentage of total population

Benefit(s)	Number of people as percentage of total population
Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Income Support and Family Credit	—
Any of the above means-tested benefits	26

Notes:

1. A "major means-tested benefit" was defined as being one of Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Income Support (including Income Support for the unemployed, before October 1996), Family Credit or Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based, from October 1996 onwards). However, on the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey dataset, it was not possible to distinguish Unemployment Benefit from Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based), which was introduced in October 1996. Thus, Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based) has not been included in analyses in the table. Analysis of the Family Resources Survey from April to September 1996 (inclusive) show that the proportion of people in households in receipt of at least one of the four means tested benefits given in the table was 27 per cent.
2. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response. Receipt of Social Security benefits are also based on respondents' own assessment and may be subject to misreporting.
3. Percentages are rounded to the nearest integer. The symbol "—" indicates less than 0.5 per cent.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants in his Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in his Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76800]

Mr. Timms: 105 staff in this Department have signed an agreement to disapply the 48 hour limit.

The standard terms and conditions of service for staff employed by the Department are well within the limits set by the Working Time Regulations. The Regulations do not require employers to keep records of the number of workers who refuse to sign an opt-out agreement and no central records are kept by this Department. Costs of complying with the Directive are not available.

Water Charges

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement of the future of the direct payment scheme for water charges; and what plans he has to increase the priority of water charges in the order of payments included in the direct payment scheme. [77078]

Angela Eagle: The provision for making direct payments from Income Support and income based Jobseeker's Allowance for water charges will continue to operate when disconnection of household water supplies is prohibited. We are considering how the scheme will operate in the light of this policy development. We do not have any plans to increase water charges in the priority order within the direct payment scheme.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the US Government since 1 June 1998; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion, and the name of the US counterpart at each meeting. [77118]

Mr. Timms: None.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the standard spending assessment for councils incorporates moneys to compensate councils for disregarding war pensions for housing benefit and council tax benefit. [76982]

Angela Eagle: The mandatory War Pension disregards are funded in the same way as other expenditure for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. The bulk of this expenditure is met by central Government subsidy. Local authorities have discretionary powers to disregard up to the full amount of a War Disablement Pension and War Widow's Pension not already covered by the statutory disregard. However, any benefit payable as a result of such discretion is funded from local authorities' own resources. It is for each local authority to decide, how much, if anything, it can afford.

Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the Benefits Agency and (b) the Child Support Agency; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [77119]

Angela Eagle: The Benefits Agency (BA) has two national newsletters produced for staff, "BA Weekly" and "BA News". The "BA Weekly" has been produced every week since the Agency was established in April 1991. "BA News" is produced monthly. It was first produced in 1991 and is intended to reach all staff in the BA.

The Child Support Agency (CSA) has two national newsletters produced for staff. "The Weekly" has been produced every week since the Agency was established in April 1993. "The Outlook" is produced monthly and was first produced in autumn 1996.

There are no security classifications on either the BA or CSA publications.

Tribunal Hearing (Aldershot)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the cost was to the public purse of the adjourned Independent Tribunal Service hearing into case No. S/45/167/1998/00627 at Aldershot on 10 March; [77099]

(2) what reasons his Department was not represented at the Independent Tribunal Service hearing into case No. S/45/167/1998/00627 at Aldershot on 10 March. [77100]

Angela Eagle: The President of the Independent Tribunal Service has advised that the cost of the adjourned hearing into case S/45/167/1998/00627 at Aldershot on 10 March 1998 was £33.48.

The tribunal had a written submission from the adjudication officer. Although it is normal practice for the Department to be represented at hearings, a presenting officer was unable to attend this hearing. The tribunal is able to hear an appeal without a presenting officer. Where a hearing is adjourned in these circumstances, a presenting officer will attend the re-hearing.

Adjourned Tribunal Hearings

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) at how many cases in the past 12 months his Department has failed to be represented at a scheduled hearing causing the tribunal to stand adjourned; and what percentage of the total number of hearings were so adjourned; [77098]

(2) what powers the Independent Tribunal Service has to make an award in favour of the applicant when the Department fails to be represented or present at hearings; [77102]

(3) if he will review the guidance given to the tribunal chairmen as to what award may be made when the Department of Social Security fails to appear and advance a reason to the tribunal for absence; and if he will make a statement. [77101]

Angela Eagle: Information about Departmental representation at hearings in the past 12 months cannot be provided and would be available only at disproportionate cost.

The Department is not obliged to provide a representative at tribunal hearings. However, under the new decision making and appeals arrangements, the Benefits Agency aims to provide a presenting officer at all hearings where a representative would add value to the proceedings.

The Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995 allow a tribunal, in the absence of a party to the proceedings, to proceed with a hearing or to give such directions for the determination of the case as it thinks proper. Similar provision is made in the regulations for new decision making and appeal arrangements which will be debated in the House on 22 March. However, regulations also provide for a tribunal to adjourn an oral hearing either on application of any party to the proceedings or of its own accord. The decision of the tribunal whether or not to adjourn a hearing will always be made on the circumstances of the individual case. The handling of such decisions is, of course, a judicial matter.

Guidance for tribunals is a matter for the President of the Independent Tribunal Service, Judge Michael Harris. I have asked Judge Harris to write to my hon. Friend.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit claims, in the last year for which figures are available, were subject to each rate of non-dependant deduction; at each rate how many claimants were living in (a) local authority properties, (b) housing association properties and (c) private properties; and what each figure represents as a percentage of total housing benefit claims. [77325]

Angela Eagle: The information is set out in the tables.

Single Gateway

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what subjects, other than employment opportunities, advice will be provided by the Single Gateway personal advisers. [77426]

Angela Eagle: The Personal Advisers' prime purpose will be to help clients explore ways in which they can overcome barriers that prevent participation in the labour market. However, the role will encompass much more than this. They will advise claimants on benefit entitlement, including any current welfare needs, and provide the first point of contact for any queries or difficulties. They will also help individuals gain access to a range of services, such as childcare provision, specialist counselling, housing support and training, and will be able to provide clients with information about their potential eligibility for in-work benefits so that clients can understand what their income levels might be if they moved into employment.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training will be given to the personal advisers who will conduct the new Single Gateway interviews; and if this training will be specific to particular claimant groups. [77429]

Angela Eagle: We are producing a programme of learning to ensure that all Personal Advisers will be able to provide advice, guidance and counselling to help clients identify and overcome their barriers to employment, and also to provide clients with access to a variety of help and information on work, benefits and services.

The programme will ensure that Personal Advisers have the necessary balance of skills in order to deal with a wide range of clients in differing circumstances, and will not be specific to particular client groups. This will be achieved through the active involvement in the programme of organisations with an understanding of the difficulties faced by different client groups, for example, carers and lone parents.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what grade the personal advisers who will conduct the new Single Gateway interviews will be recruited. [77428]

Angela Eagle: Three partner organisations are working together to deliver the Single Work-Focused Gateway service. Each have their own banding or grading structure but the Personal Adviser post will be broadly equivalent to Executive Officer grade.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets the Government have set in order to evaluate the success nationwide of the Single Gateway interview. [77427]

Angela Eagle: Single Work-Focused Gateway will be piloted in a range of different labour markets. The evaluation of these pilots will allow us to assess the potential impact of Single Work-Focused Gateway should it be extended nationwide.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews will be carried out, and which evaluation measures will be used, in assessing the success of the pilots of the Single Gateway. [77425]

Angela Eagle: The Single Work-Focused Gateway will be fully evaluated. The evaluation will compare the outcomes of participants in the pilot areas with those for similar people from other, comparable areas. The evaluation will use a range of standard evaluation techniques—quantitative and qualitative analysis, operational research, and cost-benefit analysis.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes to working practices in the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service will be required in order to implement the Single Gateway. [77430]

Angela Eagle: All partners involved in the Single Gateway (Employment Service, Benefits Agency and Local Authorities) will deal with both a wider range of clients and with a wider range of issues affecting those clients. This will necessitate much closer working relationships, including improved communications; management arrangements and Information Technology links.

Existing business processes will be affected and work is currently underway to identify these, in particular the need for business information flows between the partners and effective integration between the new Personal Adviser service and existing processes. Changes to staff locations and office layout are also likely to be required—depending on local delivery arrangements—and work is also underway to identify these changes.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for additional information technology resources following the introduction of the new Single Gateway. [77431]

Angela Eagle: The proposed design for the pilot exercises is based on extensions of, and where possible some development of, existing Employment Service, Benefits Agency and other systems. It is based on providing support to the generic Single Gateway Process Model and comprises extending access to current systems into the basic model pilot sites. These are the Employment Services' Labour Market and Employment Service Communications Systems, and the DSS' Operational Strategy and Integrated Benefit Information Systems.

Taken together, these changes will form the "core IT" upon which further enhancements and support for the Call Centre and Private/Voluntary Sector variants will be developed. As the pilots develop, and when decisions are taken whether to proceed to national implementation, more longer-term solutions will be developed and implemented.

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated cost of housing benefit fraud in each of the last 10 years. [76437]

Mr. Timms: Information about Housing Benefit fraud is not available for each of the last ten years. The first Housing Benefit Accuracy Review in 1995 estimated annual losses from fraud and strongly suspected fraud to be £905 million. The equivalent estimate from the second Review in 1997–98 is £600 million. However, due to the different methodology used in each review, it is not possible to state with an acceptable level of statistical certainty that there has been a decrease in the level of fraud and suspected fraud.

Note:

Conclusions about the level of incorrect Housing Benefit payments were derived from a sample of claims. For the Housing Benefit reviews, 95 per cent. confidence limits were calculated for each of the estimates. (£500 million to £1,300 million for the 1995 Review estimate and £410 million to £820 million for the 1997–98 Review estimate). These limits indicate the range within which it can be 95 per cent. certain that the true value for all Housing Benefit claims lie.

Private Pensions (National Insurance Rebate)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the total annual national insurance rebate to private pensions paid from the national insurance fund has been for the last 10 years. [75847]

Mr. Timms [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1999, c. 397]: The information is in the table.

The cost of the national insurance contribution rebates

£ billion

Tax Year	Rebate

Family Resources Survey

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the special analyses, including unpublished tabulations, of the Family Resources Survey which were undertaken by his Department for the Pension Provision Group. [76098]

Mr. Timms [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1999, c. 481]: The following analyses of the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey were undertaken for the Pension Provision Group:

Tabulation of the incomes of single pensioners.

Tabulation of the average incomes of pensioner units by source and by marital status and age under/over 75.

DEFENCE

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which targets the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. [71900]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 24 February 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Foxton to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I refer to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about those key targets the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA) did not meet in 1997–98, and what monitoring has been undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. As Chief Executive of ABSDA I am replying as it falls within my area of responsibility.

As reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, ABSDA did not achieve, in part, 3 out of its 4 Key Targets (KT) set for 1997–98. These were:

Key Target 1—To deliver the required level of storage and to process receipts and returns as defined in agreements with the Agency's customers. This KT is made up of 20 parts and some of these were missed. Two Stores Unit Returns were missed; these are items returned to the base depots by Units. The procedure for returning items to stock is being re-evaluated by the Agency, its Customers and Consumers and are being addressed by the ABSDA/Defence Logistics Agency (USA) Benchmarking partnership. Indications for the current year are that performance for Stores Unit Returns has improved significantly. Two Vehicle Receipts targets were also missed due to the abnormally high number of vehicles received from trade and an excessive number of faults found by the Vehicle Inspectors at the ABSDA Base Vehicle Depot Ashchurch on vehicles supplied by external suppliers.

Key Target 2—To meet the Standard Priority System 96 Supply Chain Processing Times (SCPT) for material authorised for issue. This KT breaks down into 21 parts, of which the Agency missed 6. The Agency missed two targets primarily because of the low volumes of this type that exaggerated the impact of such few failures. The 2 lowest Stores non-operational low priority targets were not met but the non-compliance had the agreement of the supported commands and resulted from reduced resources being concentrated on meeting high priority operational demands. Two Vehicles Issue targets were missed mainly due to difficulties encountered with vehicles that had been mid life extended and refurbished. Vehicles classed as fit for issue on selection were found to have faults that required rectification. It has been a difficult balancing act between the achievement of improved performance via a process review and a significant reduction in resources. In the current year all Stores operational and high priority performances are within target.

Key Target 4—To implement the recommendations of the ABSDA Information Systems Strategy. This KT has 3 elements and the Agency missed one. The target has now been deferred to Mar 99.

Performance against the subsequent Key Targets for 1998–99 is monitored by the Chief Executive and the Management Board of the Agency on a monthly basis. This performance is reported quarterly to the Agency's Owner and annually to Ministers both in the Next Steps Review and the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts. Key Target Achievement is also considered by the National Audit Office during the annual submission of the Accounts for external audit. ABSDA will be absorbed into the new Defence Storage and Distribution Agency (DSDA) on 1 Apr 99; lessons learnt from ABSDA's Performance Review, conducted by Army Management Services, have been incorporated into the Key Targets Rationale Paper for the DSDA which is currently with the Agency's Owner prior to submission to Minister (Armed Forces).

Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which targets the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99; [72805]

(2) on what date the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency published its report for the year 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [72808]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 24 February 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Boyle to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

Further to your Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency (AFPAA), these matters fall within the Chief Executive's responsibility. However, as he is currently away from office, I am replying on his behalf.

Before I address your specific questions, you may find it useful to be aware that AFPAA was formed on 1 April 1997, following recommendations made by Sir Michael Bett in his report of March 1995 of the Independent Review of the Armed Forces' Manpower, Career and Remuneration Structures. A copy of the "Bett Report" may be found in the Library of the House.

The report of the Independent Review recommended that a Defence Agency should be set up to manage Service personnel administration (but not personnel management) and tasked with progressively introducing unified systems and eventually an integrated computer system. The report also concluded that this area offered significant scope for Private Finance Initiative (PFI).

Amalgamating single Service pay, pensions and personnel administration functions into a tri-Service organisation in the first year of the Agency's operation, 1997/98, was an ambitious undertaking and I am pleased to report that this was undertaken successfully. Similarly, the parallel negotiation and implementation of a service based PFI agreement with EDS has also been completed successfully. The Agency's performance against its Key Targets must, therefore, be seen in this context.

Of those three Key targets that were not met in full, I hope that the following information provides a more detailed position:

Key Target 2—Accuracy of Personnel records and Liabilities Data.

Determine measures to set the baseline of completeness and accuracy of the record of service by Mar 1998—Partially Achieved.

This Key Target relates to the accuracy of personal and job related data held on the personnel administration IT systems maintained and developed by the Agency. I regret that this Key Target could not be completed within the timescale due to the pressures of other higher priority tasks. The Key Target was, however, carried forward into 1998. A work programme is being initiated with the 3 Services who have principal responsibility for the input, ownership and validation of this data.

Key Target 5—Customer Satisfaction.

Develop systematic and objective methods for measuring customer satisfaction in consultation with the Owner and customers by March 1998—Partially Achieved.

Whilst plans for measuring customer satisfaction were prepared during 1997/98, it was necessary to agree these with the Agency's public/private partner EDS. As the partnership did not become effective until 1 Jan 98, and with the pressure of other priority tasks, it was not possible to undertake this work before March 1998. The inaugural customer satisfaction survey was, however, completed in December 1998 and follow-up performance improvement plans are currently under development.

Key Target 7—Efficiency

Develop cost ratios and implement appropriate measures for benchmarking efficiency for AFPAA's services in core personnel administration by March 1998—Partially Achieved.

This Key Target relates to the establishment of detailed costs for services delivered by the Agency. Whilst cost ratios were developed in 1997 during the process of establishing AFPAA's PFI contract, other higher priority tasks meant that efficiency benchmarking was not achieved before March 1998. A plan for benchmarking AFPAA services has been produced during 1998/99. However, the Key Target was not carried forward to 1998/99, being replaced by an efficiency measure to reduce unit costs by 3%.

Progress against Key targets is monitored on behalf of the Defence Secretary by the Agency's Owner, Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff (Programmes and Personnel), through the medium of the Owner's Advisory Board, which meets at least three times a year.

AFPAA's performance during its first year of operation was reported in it's 1997/98 Annual Report. This report was published on 21 July 98 and copies were placed in the House Libraries. The report was not laid before Parliament as the Agency had not received a Treasury Accounts Direction at that time.

Finally, the total cost of producing of the Agency's Annual Report was £5,919 for 750 copies, equating to £7.89 per copy.

Aldermaston

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety performance of atomic weapons research establishment Aldermaston in the last calendar year. [73022]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 25 February 1999]: Safety is of prime importance to all involved in the operation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, AWE, Aldermaston. The AWE operating contractor, Hunting BRAE, publishes an annual report entitled "Environment, Safety and Health", which includes information on safety performance and the activities that are undertaken at Aldermaston to ensure that safety requirements are met. The 1998 Report is due to be published, as normal, early in the summer. This public report is underpinned by regular internal audits conducted by the contractor.

The Ministry of Defence on site Compliance Officer conducts regular confidential assessments of AWE's activities and was satisfied that they met the requirements of the Term Contract. Additionally independent assurance of the safety of AWE is provided by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate NII. Aldermaston was awarded a licence to operate by the NII for the first time in July 1997. Maintenance of the licence is subject to the licensee's satisfying the licence conditions in the face of the NII's rigorous inspection regime.

Merchant Ships (Military Support)

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, flags and dates of merchant ships chartered for defence exercises and military support operations in each year since 1996. [74964]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information has been placed in the Library.

Soldiers' Accommodation

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new units of (a) single soldiers' accommodation, (b) married quarters and (c) other new buildings will be required at (i) Tidworth and (ii) Larkhill to meet the needs of the new third mechanised brigades. [75272]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In my announcement on 2 March of the Army's basing proposals within the United Kingdom, I indicated that it was provisionally planned to deploy an AS-90 artillery regiment of around 700 personnel to Larkhill, a tank regiment of around 600 to Tidworth, an engineer regiment of around 550 men to Perham Down, and to increase the numbers of the existing REME regiment at Tidworth by some 100 men. Initial estimates are that this will lead to a requirement for 450 more single-soldier bed spaces at Larkhill, 350 single-soldier bed spaces at Tidworth and 350 new family quarters in the Tidworth, Bulford and Larkhill area. In addition, there will be a requirement to build garaging and stores for the extra vehicles and additional recreational and support facilities for the increased number of troops. These proposals are subject to planning agreement, and the detailed accommodation requirements for those units to be based at Tidworth and Larkhill will not be finalised until a strategic environmental assessment has been carried out and discussions with local planning authorities have been concluded.

Military Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military road traffic accidents were reported between April 1997 and March 1998; what was the road traffic accident rate per hundred thousand miles driven; what was the cost to (a) his Department and (b) the Army; and what was the cost of (i) compensation claims, (ii) loss of man hours, (iii) medical treatment, (iv) damage to other property, (v) damage to other vehicles and (vi) replacement vehicles. [75006]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 March 1999]: Between April 1997 and March 1998, there were a total of 9,075 road traffic accidents involving military personnel and MOD civilians. Based on the only available mileage data, for Royal Marine and Army units, this represents an estimated rate of two accidents per hundred thousand miles driven. The actual cost of insurance claims against the MOD, after taking into account costs recovered from third parties, was £13.62 million. The actual cost of MOD vehicle repairs was £5.07 million. The illustrative cost of fatalities and injuries to the Department, based on recognised costs provided by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, was £34.9 million. The estimate total cost to the Department, using Health and Safety Executive research methodology, may be up to £149.52 million. The specific cost of accidents to the Army, for loss of man hours, medical treatment, damage to other property, damage to other vehicles and replacement vehicles, is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Note:

The MOD operates a 100 per cent. accident reporting policy for insurance purposes, irrespective of whether an accident results in a fatality or injury. This differs from the DETR whose statistics are based on reportable accidents only, ie; those which result in an injury or fatality. Accidents involving MOD vehicles in the UK which result in a fatality or injury are reported to the police and by default, would be included in the DETR's national road traffic accident statistics.

Military District Hospitals

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the terms agreed with the Department of Health on which his Department operates military district hospital units at (a) Derriford, (b) Frimley and (c) Peterborough, indicating the financial payments between departments thereunder and any guarantees of performance by his Department. [75212]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 March 1999]: The Service Level Agreements (SLA) between my Department and the NHS, which underpin the Ministry of Defence Hospital Units (MDHUs), were reviewed and renegotiated during 1998–99. While the initial agreements with our three original MDHU Trusts (Derriford at Plymouth, Frimley Park, and Peterborough) have been clinically highly successful, the financial and contract arrangements for these partnerships have, however, not been so successful.

The principles of a new SLA were developed to form a revised contract from 1999–2000. Following detailed discussions with the NHS at local, regional and national levels during 1976 and 1998, contracts based on these principles are currently being negotiated locally, and will be in place for 1999–2000 at the three original MDHUs and at the new MDHU at Northallerton. The new contract model will also form the basis for all future MOD contract relationships with the NHS for hosting staff or providing treatment and will underpin a new era in understanding and clinical relationship between the MOD and the NHS.

The financial arrangements for the new model will involve a Public Expenditure Survey (PES) transfer from the MOD to the Department of Health to compensate affected Health Authorities for the loss of free provision of MOD staff, and to enable the Defence Secondary Care Agency to negotiate directly with the relevant NHS Trust. The PES transfer will amount to some £3.5 million a year. There will also be direct payments by the MOD to NHS Trusts for Service staff and the treatment of Service patients.

Under the new arrangement, the financial cost and financial risk associated with the absence of military medical or nursing personnel falls on the MOD. In terms of treatment, the host Trust is expected to meet the throughput and waiting times targets set by the MOD, which are included in the contract with provision, as with any NHS purchaser, for appropriate financial adjustment if they are not met.

Women

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the deployment of women in the armed forces in front-line combat; and what plans he has to review that policy. [75305]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 10 March 1999]: The Armed Forces' position on the employment of women is quite clear; service-women are excluded from posts only where their presence would be to the detriment of combat effectiveness or on the ground of health and safety.

96 per cent. of posts in the RAF and 73 per cent. of posts in the Naval Service have been open to women for some time, but recently, as the result of a further review, 1,300 specialist posts, filled by Royal Navy and Army personnel attached to the Royal Marines, were opened to women. On 1 April 1998, the Army increased the posts open to women from 47 per cent. to 70 per cent. The remaining posts closed to women will remain closed until we can properly assess the impact on combat effectiveness of the recent changes; this work will be completed in two to three years.

Following recent studies by the Royal Navy, I announced on 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 300–01, that women will remain excluded from service in submarines and mine clearance diving for the present time.

Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries had armed forces involved in the armoured battlegroup exercises in Canada carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76609]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The armed forces of the United Kingdom only were involved in the exercises.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, and how many personnel were deployed on, the NATO joint exercise in South Africa carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76592]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There were no NATO joint exercises in South Africa between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries had armed forces involved in the infantry battalion exercises in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76610]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Armed Forces of the United Kingdom took part in the infantry battalion exercises in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. Each of the exercises deployed with a Kenyan liaison officer, who was attached for all or part of the exercise.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were deployed on the brigade exercise in Poland carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76612]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise ULAN EAGLE, which took place at the Drawko-Pomorskie training area in North East Poland in October 1997, was a British Army exercise undertaken by 20th Armoured Brigade and it involved 3,518 personnel.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the jungle training exercise in Thailand carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72984]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 2 March 1999]: This exercise was a sub-element of exercise Ocean Wave, which took place in the Gulf, Far East and Asia Pacific regions between 13 January and 28 August 1997, see parliamentary answer, 26 February 1999, Official Report, column 471. The additional costs separately identifiable for the jungle training exercise in Thailand were £27,000, which were included in the overall cost of exercise Ocean Wave.

Logistics Information Systems Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Logistics Information Systems Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76892]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Logistic Information Systems Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. A. Flanagan to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence as to the date the Logistic Information Systems Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what the production costs for the report were.

The annual report was published on 9 July 1998 and the total cost to produce was £19,744.00.

Queen Victoria School

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Queen Victoria School; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Queen Victoria School published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76898]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Queen Victoria School. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of employees and annual report as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Queen Victoria School.

The number of people employed is currently 76 and was 70 at the inception of the Agency on 1 April 1992.

The Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 was published on 23 July and the cost of production was £1,000.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Meteorological Office; and what was the figure at its inception. [76888]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

Parliamentary Question: Number of people employed by the Met. Office

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people employed by The Met. Office now and at its inception. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of The Met. Office.

As at 28 February 1999, The Met. Office employed 2234 staff. When we became an agency on 1 April 1990 the figure was 2447. A breakdown is given below.

	1.4.90	28.2.99
Senior Civil Service	10	8
Scientific, managerial, technical	1889	1622
Support	503	585
Locally employed civilians overseas	46	19
Total	2447	2234

You may be interested to know that when The Met. Office was formed in 1854, as part of the Board of Trade to provide meteorological and sea-current information to mariners, it employed just 4 people. Today, our activities include global weather forecasts for defence and civil aviation; specialist services to commerce and industry (including the utilities); a wide range of public meteorological services, including severe weather warnings; and a substantial climate research and prediction programme.

RAF Training Group Defence Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the RAF Training Group Defence Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the RAF Training Group Defence Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76878]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Training Group Defence Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. J. Stables to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces about the number of people employed by the Royal Air Force Training Group Defence Agency and production of the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, as these matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Data relating to staff numbers is collated on a quarterly basis, and the latest available figures are those for 31 December 1998. At this time the Agency employed 5,759 permanent staff of whom 3,572 were military personnel and 2,187 civilian staff. The Agency was formed on 1 April 1994 and during the first financial year of its operation the average number of permanent employees was 8,309 (6,035 military and 2,274 civilian).

I signed the Agency's annual report for 1997/98 in June 1998 and it was placed in the Library of the House on 14 July 1998. The direct cost of its production was just under £17,000.

UK Hydrographic Office

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the UK Hydrographic Office; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the UK Hydrographic Office published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76874]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Hydrographic Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Clarke to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence a Parliamentary Question relating to the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office (UKHO). As the matters you raise fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the UKHO, I have been asked to reply to you direct.

You requested details about the number of people currently employed at the UKHO and also at its inception. As at 1 March 1999, the total number of people employed at the UKHO was 916. In terms of the number of full time equivalent staff, this translates to a figure of 874. In terms of people employed at its inception, the Hydrographic Office was formed by an Order in Council in 1795; at that time it employed only 3 people, Alexander Dalrymple, the first Hydrographer of the Navy, and 2 other cartographic staff.

As you may know, the UKHO attained Trading Fund status on 1 April 1996, and on the basis that you might wish to compare the number of people employed then and now, I can advise you that as at 1 April 1996 the number of people employed was 883. In terms of the number of full time equivalent staff this translates to a figure of 842.

Turning now to your enquiries concerning the UKHO's Annual Report, I can tell you that the UKHO's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997/98 was laid before Parliament on Wednesday 15 July 1998. As regards the cost of production, this totalled some £26,626. That said, I think it might be useful to you if I were to qualify that figure to indicate, with a little more precision, what it covered. The cost of production included all production compilation effort, including the sub-contracted composing costs, printing, finishing and associated materials.

I hope this reply has been of assistance. Please do not hesitate to get in touch if you need any further amplification.

Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76885]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from S. R. Hill to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation (NARO) as this matter falls within my areas of responsibility as Chief Executive of the NARO.

2. As at 1st March 1999, the NARO employed 1396 personnel, the figure at its inception of 1st April 1992 was 1618.

3. The NARO Annual Report for 1997–98 was laid in the library of the House on 1st July 1998 and the cost of production of the report was £2,900 for 500 copies.

Military Survey Defence Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Military Survey Defence Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Military Survey Defence Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76887]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Military Survey Defence Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. R. Wildman to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people employed by the Military Survey Defence Agency as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Military Survey Defence Agency.

The Military Survey Defence Agency currently employs 1,243 staff. At inception in 1991 the Agency employed 1,568 staff, although 250 of these staff were technically outside the Agency boundary at the time. These staff have since been amalgamated into the Agency.

The Agency Annual Report and Accounts were laid before Parliament on 28 January 1999. The cost of producing the Annual Report was £8,286.

RAF Signals Engineering Establishment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76879]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Defence Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. Jones to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence in which you asked: how many people are currently employed by the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment; what the figure was at its inception; on what date the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report, as these matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment Defence Agency.

The Agency currently has an authorised establishment of 977 personnel and the strength, as at 1 March 1999, was 929 made up of 339 RAF, 561 Civil Servants and 29 contractors employed to fill established specialist posts, for which suitably-qualified Civil Servants cannot be recruited, and for short-term requirements. At the launch of the Agency in November 1994 the authorised establishment was 1,570 personnel. The majority of the reduction has resulted from the placing of a Multi-Activity Contract with SERCO Defence Limited for the delivery of provisioning, stockholding, transportation, computer and administration services.

The Agency's Annual Report and Accounts was published on 12 August 1998 at a cost of £5,606 which covered the design and printing.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Ministry of Defence Police published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76886]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Policy Agency. I have asked the Chief Constable to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Walter Boreham to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 18 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Ministry of Defence Police report for 1997–98 as this falls into my area of responsibility as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Policy Agency.

My 1997–98 annual report was laid before Parliament on 20 July 1998. The cost of production was £24,191.

RAF Performance

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the RAF's end of year performance reports in 1996–97 and 1997–98. [76736]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The RAF End of Year Performance Report is a document designed to report on the Service's performance against its Management Plan over the past year, and identifies key issues and themes with major implications for the following year. As such it contains information on operational capabilities of elements of the Armed Forces.

For these reasons I am withholding these documents under Exemptions 1 (Defence, Security and International Relations) and 2 (Internal Discussion and Advice) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

An unclassified account of the MOD's performance can be found in the Departmental Performance Report, which was published on 30 November 1998 and is available in the Library of the House.

EU Directives and Regulations

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list EU directives and regulations which impact on health and safety issues, working conditions and equality between men and women amongst military and civilian employees for whom he is responsible. [76961]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Unless they contain a specific exemption, all EU directives and regulations which impact on health and safety issues, working conditions and equality between men and women apply to service personnel and Ministry of Defence civilian employees.

Armed Forces (Compensation)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish a consultation document on the principles underlying a possible new structure of compensation arrangements for the armed forces. [76959]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 502.

Common Leave Allowance

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if from April 1999 all ranks of all three services will move to a common leave allowance of 30 working days. [76958]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The "Policy for People" element of the Strategic Defence Review included a pledge that a Common Leave Allowance of 30 working days would be introduced for all Armed Forces personnel, regardless of rank or service, on 1 April 1999. The new policy will be introduced by the Naval Service and Royal Air Force on 1 March 1999, and by the Army on 1 April 1999. The date of introduction is governed by the Common Leave Year of each Service.

Defence Estate (London)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Review of his Department's Estate in London to be concluded. [77314]

Mr. Spellar: The Review of the MOD Estate in London is continuing. On the basis of the work undertaken to date, I have asked for a report in July.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategy underlying the current bombing of Iraq. [77357]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government's aim in enforcing the no-fly zones is to continue the essential humanitarian task of preventing Saddam Hussein from using his airforce to repress his own people. In undertaking this mission, we have made it clear that we will take robust but appropriate defensive measures in response to any attempts by Iraq to threaten our aircrew. Current military action is purely in self-defence, and taken in response to threats to the coalition. Since the end of Operation Desert Fox, over 160 Iraqi aircraft have violated the no-fly zones and coalition aircraft have been shot at or threatened over 70 times.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Paveway III laser-guided bombs and Harm anti-radar missiles have been dropped on Iraq since Desert Fox. [77329]

Mr. George Robertson: Since Operation Desert Fox, military action by coalition aircraft has been taken only in self-defence in response to Iraqi attempts to shoot down or otherwise threaten our aircraft. RAF Tornados have dropped two Paveway III bombs and fired no High-Speed Anti-Radiation Missiles (HARM) on Iraq since Operation Desert Fox.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons he did not seek UN approval for changing the rules of engagement on bombings of Iraq. [77259]

Mr. George Robertson: UK forces patrolling the no-fly zones in support of UN Resolution 688 are not under UN command. Their Rules of Engagement are therefore an entirely national matter.

Service Personnel (Social Security Benefits)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of service personnel in receipt of social security benefits in each of the last five years. [77449]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Except in a limited number of circumstances, for example, when personnel are serving overseas, entitlement to DSS benefits is normally a matter between individual service personnel and the DSS, to which claims are made direct. Therefore, my Department has no overview of the extent of benefits being claimed by service personnel.

Widow's Pension

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the loss of widow's and widower's pensions on post-retirement remarriage; and if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of widow's and widower's pensions. [77863]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend from time to time receives representations from hon. Members, the ex-service organisations and from individuals, on widow's and widower's pensions, including suggestions that the widows or widowers of post-retirement marriages to former members of the Armed Forces who left the Services before 6 April 1978 should be entitle to a Forces Family Pension. Widow's and widower's pensions will be examined as part of the review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme, which is expected to report later this year. This will include a re-examination of the entitlement of such individuals, but I cannot yet predict the outcome. It would be a departure from normal practice to make retrospective improvements to the terms of pensions already in payment.

Kosovo

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for overstretch in the Army of the proposed deployment in Kosovo of British troops. [77302]

Mr. George Robertson: As I have said before, a deployment to Kosovo would represent a challenging new commitment for the Army, especially as implementation of the Strategic Defence Review is still at an early stage. The consequences for overstretch would obviously depend on the size and duration of any deployment, and on what happens to other commitments in the meantime.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

CAP

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome of the discussions on reform of the CAP at the Council of Ministers was; and if he will make a statement. [74384]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 11 March 1999]: The House was informed of the outcome of the negotiations on the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy in my statement to the House on 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 626–40.

Date-based Export Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the Prime Minister's oral answer to the hon. Member for North Dorset (Mr. Walter), 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 385–86, when he issued the invitation to the European Commission to inspect the abattoirs which will be involved in the Date-based Export Scheme; and when he expects the inspections to take place. [74331]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 March 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for South Holland and The Deepings (Mr. Hayes), on 3 March 1999, Official Report, column 774.

Pig Producers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the repayment of subsidies which the Commission has deemed irregular which were paid to French and German pig producers; and if he will make a statement. [77130]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998, both the German and French Governments made announcements about the introduction of state aid schemes aimed at assisting their pig producers. Following representations from the UK and others, however, the German proposal was withdrawn. The EU Commission has expressed concern about some elements of the French proposal and has asked for further information under procedures laid down in Article 93(2) of the Treaty. The French Government have until the end of march to respond. We will, of course, continue to press the Commission to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty which include, if necessary, ordering the repayment of any state aid subsidies plaid illegally.

Tobacco

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on EU agricultural policy and its impact on the financial regime for tobacco grown in the EU. [76953]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 294.

Pork Products

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the sale of imported pork products which are of a type that cannot legally be produced in the United Kingdom. [76753]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 March 1999]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to imported pork products which were produced from pigs which may have been reared in stall and tether production systems or fed with pig feed containing meat and bone meal (MBM). An import ban on such products would be incompatible with our EU and World Trade Organisation obligations. I will, however, continue to urge retailers and caterers to take account of animal welfare and other considerations when sourcing pork and pork products. The hon. Member may be aware that major UK retailers have given voluntary assurances to Ministers that they will only source own label fresh pork, bacon, ham, sausages and pork pies from stall and tether and MBM free production systems.

Quarantine

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when Ministers or officials wrote to the appropriate authorities in the European Commission seeking confirmation that proposals to proceed with UK legislation on animal quarantine reform based on the outcome of the Kennedy report (a) are compatible with single market requirements and (b) will not be opposed by the Commission. [76663]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 March 1999]: We have kept the Commission closely informed about the Kennedy Report at meetings and through correspondence. If it became necessary to write along the lines suggested by the hon. Gentleman, we would do so.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about Government policy on the control of genetically modified food. [75373]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 17 March 1999]: The Government's policy on the control of GM foods is first and foremost to protect public health and secondly to ensure that all such foods are clearly labelled so that consumers are able to make an informed choice about whether or not to consume them.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has undertaken of the safety of genetically modified foods on a similar basis to those undertaken for pharmaceutical products. [75418]

Mr. Rooker: The authorisation of market release for new drugs and genetic modified (GM) foods are subject to different, but equally strict, criteria.

The assessment for new drugs is based on safety, quality and efficacy. The assessment of novel, including GM, foods is based on establishing that they do not present a danger to the public; that the public are not misled in any way about them; and that they do not disadvantage the public in terms of their nutritional content.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce regulations for the enforcement of EC Regulation 1139/98 concerning the labelling of genetically-modified soya and maize. [78044]

Mr. Rooker: I have laid before Parliament this morning the Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1999, which will come into force tomorrow. These provide the means for Local Authorities to be able to enforce the EC Regulation that requires all foods containing genetically modified soya or maize ingredients to be clearly labelled. This Regulation, which took effect last September, applies to all foods produced and labelled from that date.

The Government are determined that consumers should be able to choose whether or not to eat genetically modified foods. This includes food sold in restaurants, cafes and takeaways and not just that available from supermarkets. The UK is the first member state in Europe to take steps to ensure that consumers eating out will have the same right to choose whether or not to consume foods containing GM ingredients as those buying from shops.

As a measure of how seriously the Government take the right of consumers to have clear, reliable information about the GM content of food they buy, we have decided not to wait the customary 21 days for these Regulations to come into force but to make them fully effective from tomorrow.

A letter is being sent today to interested parties advising them of the content of the Regulations and enclosing a copy of the text. Further copies of the Regulations are available from John Furzer or Raj Pal, MAFF, Room 239c, Ergon House, 17 Smith Square, London SW1P 3JR. In addition, the legislation can be viewed from this afternoon at MAFF Website "http://www.maff.gov.uk/food/novel/labelreg.pdf". A Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Regulations has been prepared and placed in the Library of the House.

Animal Feeding Stuffs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the availability of organic high protein feed supplements for sheep over the lambing period; and if he will make a statement. [76795]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 17 March 1999]: No specific assessment has been made. However inquiries have not indicated problems with the current availability of organic feeding stuffs for sheep.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the volume of farm animal feed that has been consumed since the introduction of genetically modified material to such feed. [75106]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 March 1999]: In total, about 20 million tonnes of animal feed were purchased in both 1997 and 1998 by livestock farmers for use on their farms, which included some 3.6 million tonnes of imported soya and maize products. A proportion of this would have been derived from GM crops. However, in the absence of crop segregation and specific labelling requirements, it is not possible to know the precise amount. In addition, farmers will have fed material from home-produced crops which would not have contained any genetically modified materials.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will invite Mrs. M. Kellie of Nelson House, Staverton, Totnes, Devon TQ9 6PA to take part in the open consultation process on the establishment of a Food Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the consultation process. [76794]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 17 March 1999]: Mrs. Kellie attended a consultation meeting in Bristol on 15 March. She has also been sent a copy of the consultation papers dealing with the draft Food Standards Bill, on which her comments would be welcome.

By 16 March, 176 responses to this consultation exercise had been received. The deadline for responses to the consultation is 24 March.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has received to date to the consultation exercise on a draft Food Standards Agency Bill. [76458]

Mr. Rooker: By 15 March, 158 responses had been received. The deadline for responses to the consultation is 24 March 1999.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of the draft Directive on Irradiated Food. [75090]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 March 1999]: The Government consider that the recently adopted EC Directive on Irradiated Food represents an important step in harmonising food irradiation legislation across the EU. Amongst other things, this will require all irradiated foods to be clearly labelled in line with current UK requirements. The Directive will be implemented in the UK within the prescribed time frame of 18 months from the date when the Directive is published by the EC Commission.

Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the process following the nomination of Julie Shepherd to serve on the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. [75087]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 March 1999]: A number of candidates were considered for the post of consumer representative on the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. The person chosen for this position by Ministers was particularly well qualified having both experience of consumer issues and a scientific qualification. If the hon. Member has particular concerns about this, perhaps he will write to me.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by title the unpublished reports into aspects of genetic modification which are held by his Department. [75098]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 March 1999]: It is not the normal practice of governments to release details of information relating to internal policy analysis as is made clear in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

This Department does, however, seek to make available as much information about genetic modification as possible. For example, the minutes of the meetings of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP), and papers produced and considered by the Committee, are routinely published on the MAFF website. Reports of ACNFP assessments of novel food applications are also published in the Committee's annual reports.

Meat Inspection

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has collated on the charges levied on abattoirs in other EU member states for meat inspection as prescribed by the EU Directive. [76288]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 193.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of passports issued for cattle for each month since the start of the scheme which have required amendment as a result of error. [76219]

Mr. Rooker: Since the Cattle Tracing System was launched on 28 September 1998, the following number of cheque-book style passports have been re-issued by the British Cattle Movement Service in each month:

Date
28 September—October 1998:	5,368
November 1998:	13,237
December 1998:	13,717
January 1999:	20,364
February 1999:	16,880

This figure includes both passports re-issued as a result of error and those re-issued because of loss.

Figures for passports re-issued under the Cattle Passports System between 1 July 1996 and 28 September 1998 are not readily available and could be gathered only at disproportionate cost.

Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received requesting a review of the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966; and if he will make a statement. [76618]

Mr. Rooker: Both the British Equine Veterinary Association (BEVA) and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons (RCVS) have been seeking changes to the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966 and Orders made under it. These representations, which deal with the scope of the work which should be reserved to veterinary surgeons or which might be entrusted to paraprofessionals, have raised a number of issues that require serious consideration.

US Dairy Imports

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount by value of US dairy products are imported into the United Kingdom; and if they benefit from the US Dairy Export Incentive Programme. [76207]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 March 1999]: In 1998 the UK imported dairy products from the US to the value of £3,436,068. 90 per cent. of this figure consisted of imports of ice cream. In 1997–98 and 1998–99 the UK has not been a target market for the US Dairy Export Incentive Programme (which does not in any case cover ice cream), so UK imports of US dairy products have not benefited from this Programme.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the Dairy Export Incentive Programme of the United States is consistent with World Trade Organisation agreements. [76206]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Export subsidies are permitted under the WTO Agreement on Agriculture, subject to commitments to reduce both the volume of and expenditure on subsidised exports over the period of the Agreement, and to notify these subsidies to the WTO.

The US Dairy Incentive Export Programme is a notified subsidy, and there is no evidence from the most recent figures submitted to suggest that the US is not reducing its agricultural export subsidies in line with the Agriculture Agreement. I therefore have no reason to believe that this measure is not in compliance with WTO rules. However, the compatibility with WTO rules of any trade measure can be definitively determined only under WTO dispute settlement procedures.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those companies involved in genetically modified crops to which research grants have been awarded by his Department in the last three years. [75863]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 10 March 1999]: The Ministry has awarded a research grant to Advanced Technologies (Cambridge) Ltd. together with Leeds University to develop nematode resistance in crops.

In addition, the Ministry co-funds research on a wide range of topics under the Government's LINK scheme. The following companies are 'co-funding' genetically modified crop research with the Ministry.

Zeneca, Nickerson Zwaan BV

PBI (now Monsanto)

Advanced Technologies (Cambridge) Ltd.

Agricultural Genetics Co.

Novartis

Agrevo

Nutting and Sons Ltd.

Elsoms Seeds Ltd.

A. L. Tozer Ltd.

Kentish Garden Marketing Ltd.

Horse Chestnut Disease

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into Horse Chestnut disease; [R] [75850]

(2) what publicity his Ministry has undertaken to ensure that the symptoms of Horse Chestnut disease can be recognised; and what estimate he has made of its prevalence in the United Kingdom; [R] [75832]

(3) what discussions he has had with ministers of European Union countries about the spread of Horse Chestnut disease; [R] [75833]

(4) what arrangements he has made for effective measures to be taken to combat Horse Chestnut disease. [R] [75834]

Mr. Morley: The horse chestnut leaf miner causes horse chestnut trees to lose their leaves; these symptoms are sometimes referred to as Horse Chestnut disease. The leaf miner has not been found in the United Kingdom; it prefers the warmer summers found in other parts of Europe.

The Forestry Commission has studied the problem and evaluated the risks it poses to trees in the United Kingdom, drawing on experience and research in continental Europe. The Commission concluded that the risk of the leaf miner becoming established in the United Kingdom is very small, and that there is therefore no need for further research in the United Kingdom at present. We shall, of course, continue to monitor the spread of the leaf miner elsewhere in Europe, in association with other European countries.

As the leaf miner is not present in the United Kingdom, we do not think that a publicity campaign to heighten awareness is necessary. We shall, however, continue to enforce our strict plant health regulations which should ensure that the leaf miner does not enter the country on imported plants or timber.

Neither my right hon. Friend the Minister nor I have discussed the problem with fellow Ministers in the European Union. Our officials in the Forestry Commission are, however, keeping in close contact with their colleagues in other Governments and research institutes throughout Europe.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Ministers in his Department have received on genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry from the US Government. [72760]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 1 March 1999]: Genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry have been raised on three occasions by representatives of the US Government since May 1997. This took place during meetings between my right hon. Friend the previous Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the US Ambassador to London on 26 November 1997; and between my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and (a) the US Trade Representative, Ambassador Barshefsky, on 23 October 1998 and (b) Mr. Dan Glickman, the US Agriculture Secretary, on 22 January 1999.

English Wine

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are (a) the maximum permitted quota for English wine, (b) the current output of English vineyards and (c) the types of grapes which are allowed to be grown in England. [76159]

Mr. Morley: There is no quota for English wine. Because of the UK climate, vineyard output is variable: average production in England and Wales over the period 1993–97 was 16,344 hectolitres, while in 1997 (the last available year) it was 6,523 hectolitres. The vine varieties which may be used for table wine and quality wine in the UK are set out in the CAP (Wine) Regulations 1996, as amended.

Flood and Coastal Defences

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish his Department's revised Flood and Coastal Defence Project Appraisal Guidance Notes. [76372]

Mr. Morley: We plan to replace the Project Appraisal Guidance Notes with a series of six documents covering strategic planning and appraisal; economic appraisal; risk assessment; environmental appraisal; post project evaluation in addition to an introductory volume. The series will be published over the next eighteen months. The guidance on economic appraisal is nearing finalisation and publication is due by the summer.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those who have been formally asked to comment on drafts of his Department's Flood and Coastal Defence Project Appraisal Guidance Notes; and if he will publish a list of consultees and their responses. [76380]

Mr. Morley: Prior to embarking on a review of the Project Appraisal Guidance Notes operating authorities—the Environment Agency, local authorities and Internal Drainage Bodies—the Ministry's Flood and Coastal Defence Policy and Review Group consultants and contractors were consulted on their effectiveness and provided the opportunity to contribute to a revision. We concluded that the current Notes should be replaced with a series which would continue to elaborate Treasury guidelines, but would update and present existing guidance in a single series. Preparation of these documents is being progressed under the guidance of specific steering groups with appropriate representation drawn from among operating authorities, English nature, and consultants.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76413]

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76180]

Mr. Nick Brown: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, the Cabinet Office on 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 651–52.

No "laptop red boxes" are currently in use in my Department.

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what measures he has put in place to improve protection for wildlife. [77187]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The Government are committed to a continuing expansion of areas under agreement under the major agri-environment schemes and are making an extra £40 million available over the next three years for these schemes in England.

Other measures include introducing stronger protection for internationally important wildlife sites from flooding and coastal erosion, persuading the European Commission to simplify the arrangements for voluntary set-aside to enable it to be of greater benefit for wildlife, encouraging the development of the flax protocol, and updating Codes of Practice for Pesticides and the Protection of Water, Soil and Air.

Multinational Food Companies

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards, and what assessment he has made of, the implications for food security of the increased role of multinational companies in the food chain. [76499]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 March 1999]: My Department has every confidence in the security of food supplies due to the diverse make-up of the sector which ranges from a myriad of small domestic companies through to a small number of large multinational companies. Each has its own important role to play in the market place.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Fraud

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) discussions she has had and (b) proposals her Department has put forward at Council of Ministers' meetings in respect of EU fraud; and if she will make a statement. [77781]

Clare Short: The Development Council most recently discussed EU fraud on 30 November 1998 in the context of allegations about the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO). The Government seek to ensure that anti-fraud considerations are taken fully into account when new policies are being developed and new or revised Regulations are on the table.

Specific discussions on fighting EU fraud will be discussed at ECOFIN where the Treasury leads. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will provide details in answer to the hon. Member's question.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list what her Department's budget for the Commonwealth Development Corporation was or is for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [77624]

Clare Short: The relevant figures are as follows:

Voted in estimates

£ million

	Payments to CDC	Receipts from CDC	Net provision
1997–98[1]	23.286	33.276	–9.900
1998–99[2]	35.919	35.919	0
1999–2000[3]	38.670	38.670	0

[1] outturn
[2] estimated outturn
[3] budget

Non-voted budget figures score as part of my Department's public expenditure figures. These reflect changes in CDC's cash deposits between year ends, not the absolute amount of cash balance which CDC holds. (A negative figure means an increase in cash deposits over the year). Relevant figures for the period in question are £12.5 million, –£15.2 million, and zero respectively.

British Council

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her Department's expenditure or budgeted expenditure through the British Council for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [77619]

Clare Short: In 1997–98 we provided a grant-in-aid of £29.8 million to support the British Council's development activities. In 1998–99 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) assumed responsibility for the Council's grant-in-aid and the resources set aside in the Department for International Development's (DFID) budget—some £30.3 million—have been transferred to the FCO.

The Council also undertakes work for DFID under contract arrangements, typically project management. In 1997–98 the value of contracts which they won was £28.7 million.

Debt Relief

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much debt relief was granted by her Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [77622]

Clare Short: In 1997–98 the Department for International Development (DFID) approved new debt relief arrangements totalling £26.1 million. To date in 1998–99 a further £10.3 million of debt relief has been granted. In addition, over the past two years, we have foregone repayments of aid loans totalling £38.8 million under debt relief arrangements reached before April 1997.

As well as cancelling aid debts owed to my Department, we have provided assistance to countries to help them meet their debt service payments. We have provided £10 million to Mozambique in 1997–98 and £16 million in 1998–99 for this purpose. For Tanzania we have provided £16.6 million in 1997–98 and £25 million in 1998–99, and we contributed £5 million to the Multilateral Debt Trust Fund for Rwanda in January 1999. Most recently, in March 1999, we contributed £10 million to the Trust Fund set up following Hurricane Mitch, to assist Nicaragua and Honduras meet their international debt service payments.

DFID is also assisting the international financial institutions in providing debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative. In June 1998, we contributed £6.3 million to the HIPC Trust Fund to assist the African Development Bank (AfDB) with its costs in providing debt relief for Uganda. We have pledged a further £30 million for the AfDB, £11 million of which is earmarked for Mali and Mozambique, who are expected to receive HIPC debt relief later this year.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people were directly employed by her Department on 1 March. [77620]

Clare Short: Statistics are produced on a quarterly basis. As at 1 January 1999, the Department for International Development directly employed 1,130 staff.

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 were (a) in force on 31 December 1998 and (b) issued during the course of 1998 for (i) the interception of telecommunications, (ii) the interception of letters and (iii) in total. [77276]

Mr. Straw: The Commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 publishes figures on the number of interception warrants issued by the Home Secretary in his annual reports. In his report for 1998, (which will shortly be presented to the Prime Minister) the Commissioner will record the following numbers.

Numbers of interception warrants issued by the Home Secretary: 1998

	Number
Interception warrants in force on 31 December 1998:
Telecommunications	385
Letters	48
Total	433
Interception warrants issued during the course of 1998:
Telecommunications	1,646
Letters	117
Total	1,763

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for warrants under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 were refused in each of the last five years. [77278]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is not available. Each application for interception of communications is subject to careful scrutiny at a number of stages before a warrant is issued. The application is submitted by a very senior officer following scrutiny within the Agency concerned. Within my Department, it will normally be examined by officials at four successive levels of seniority before being presented to me for approval. I examine each application carefully before issuing the warrant.

At any stage in this process the case may be, and on occasion is, referred back to the applicant agency for clarification or further detail. This may, and occasionally does, result in a decision that the application should be withdrawn or that a warrant should not be issued. Records are not kept in a form which would enable the information requested to be extracted without disproportionate cost. But given the very careful scrutiny which I have described, it is seldom necessary for the Home Secretary to refuse to issue a warrant.

Surveillance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the consequence of incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights into United Kingdom law for the use of police and security service surveillance methods; and if he will make a statement. [77293]

Mr. Straw: Surveillance by the police and security service must be carried out in a way compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights to which the United Kingdom adheres, even before its incorporation into United Kingdom law. My Department is currently considering whether further changes are needed to the framework of controls on the use of surveillance.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by date, the number of people who have been turned away after queuing at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate on each day after 1 February. [77809]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: From 1 February to 4 March, all callers attending the Immigration and Nationality Directorate Public Caller Unit (PCU) were seen by an officer. On Wednesday 4 March, following a disturbance by certain individuals in the queue, it proved necessary to close the doors to the public early. In the light of the incident it was decided that for Health and Safety reasons and for a temporary period, only the first 400 callers would be allowed in to the PCU each day. This restricted service was also in operation on 5, 8 and 9 March whilst managers considered how to provide better facilities for callers. I regret that figures were not kept of the number of callers turned away during those four days.

Since 10 March, additional temporary accommodation has been used and all callers to the PCU are again being seen on the day by a member of staff. I am informed that the PCU is now dealing with more people each day than it was in the second half of last year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received about the operation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate since 1 January. [76962]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been an increase in complaints about the operation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) following the introduction of the new caseworking arrangements in IND headquarters in Croydon and the disruption caused by the relocation of about 900 staff and 200,000 files. However, the numbers of complaints are not recorded.

Police Statistics

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were in post in each constabulary in Wales (a) in April 1997 and (b) at the latest available date. [77554]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is set out in the table:

Force	31 March 1997	30 September 1998 [1]
Dyfed-Powys	1,005	1,013
Gwent	1,243	1,254
North Wales	1,369	1,395
South Wales	2,976	2,946
Total	6,593	6,608

Court Welfare Officers

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of training court welfare officers in each of the last two years; and what training was made available to such officers. [77556]

Mr. George Howarth: The total spent on centrally supported training for family court welfare officers was £68,950 in 1997–98 and £65,710 in 1998–99. This training took the form of a modular learning programme for staff new to family court welfare work. Additional training has been provided by individual probation services, but figures for the amounts spent are not held centrally. There is also a training manual, "An introduction to the work of the family court welfare service", which was prepared in 1996 by the Association of Chief Officers of Probation, and a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is provided to (a) court welfare officers and (b) relevant members of the judiciary on parental alienation syndrome. [77558]

Mr. George Howarth: The training material provided for family court welfare officers covers the psychology of children in separating families. The training of members of the judiciary is a matter for the Lord Chancellor.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons Her Majesty's Government have not ratified the Council of Europe: Protocol of amendment to the European convention for the protection of vertebrate animals used for experimental and other scientific purposes; and if he will make a statement; [77988]

(2) for what reasons Her Majesty's Government have not ratified the Council of Europe's European convention for the protection of vertebrate animals used for experimental and other scientific purposes; and if he will make a statement. [77285]

Mr. George Howarth: The United Kingdom signed, but postponed ratification of European Convention ETS 123 at the request of the European Commission. Through an agreement brokered during the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Union in 1998, the way has been cleared for the Community and member states to accede to the Convention by 1 January 2000.

We intend to lay instruments of accession to meet this timetable. This will include ratification of the Amending Protocol. As part of our preparation, we are canvassing the Bailiwicks of Jersey and Guernsey, the Isle of Man and Northern Ireland about their wishes with regard to ratification.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76417]

Mr. Straw: The information showing appointments to public bodies between 1 November 1998 and 28 February 1999 is shown in the tables.

I am unable to publish the names of those appointed to the Boards of Visitors in England and Wales because of concerns for their personal safety, but I can say that 100 new appointments were made between 1 November 1998 and 28 February 1999. These posts are not remunerated.

Fires

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many fires there were in domestic premises in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998; [77199]

(2) how many fires were started by arson in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [77198]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997, the United Kingdom fire service attended a total number of 86,400 primary fires (those involving property or casualties) which were of malicious or suspected deliberate ignition. The number of arson offences recorded by the police in England and Wales for the same period was 31,500.

The total number of dwelling fires attended by the United Kingdom fire service was 72,200. Data for 1998 are not yet available.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees who have been granted asylum are currently resident in Britain; and what percentage are known to be in receipt of means-tested benefits. [76605]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that information regarding the number of refugees currently resident in the United Kingdom is not available.

It is possible to say how many people are granted asylum in any one year, but not whether they have remained in the United Kingdom. Some refugees decide to go back to their country of origin when circumstances improve. Nor is it possible to determine the percentage of refugees in receipt of means-tested benefits.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of refugees seeking asylum in the United Kingdom by (a) nationality and (b) country of origin in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998. [R] [76751]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The requested information is given in the table. I regret that information on the country of origin is not held centrally and could be collated only at substantial cost.

Immigration and Asylum Appeals

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) appeals were lodged against deportation by overstayers and others not lawfully in the UK and (b) immigration/asylum appeals there were in total, in the last full year for which figures are available; and how many of those appeals were allowed in each case. [76579]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In 1998, the Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA) received a total of 24,720 appeals to immigration adjudicators. Of these, 15,440 related to applications for asylum and 9,275 to other immigration cases.

In the same period, 25,320 adjudicator appeals, in asylum cases, were determined by the IAA. It is estimated that of these, 2,355 were allowed. I regret that information regarding the number of non-asylum appeals allowed is not available.

With regard to appeals lodged against deportation by overstayers and others not lawfully in the United Kingdom, information at this level of detail could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration detainees there were at the latest date for which figures are available in (i) immigration detention centres and (ii) prison establishments who (a) had been convicted of a criminal offence in the UK, (b) were awaiting removal following a recommendation for deportation made by a court, (c) were awaiting removal having exhausted all appeal rights and (d) who were not within the above categories. [76614]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information, on all persons detained solely under Immigration Act powers in immigration detention centres and prisons in the United Kingdom as at 31 January 1999, is given in the table. The detailed information requested can be obtained only through the examination of individual case records and is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants in his Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in his Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76806]

Mr. Straw: No figures of the kind sought by the hon. Member are currently available. The standard terms and conditions of service for staff employed by the Home Office are well within the limits set by the Working Time Regulations. The Regulations do not require employers to keep records of the number of workers who refuse to sign an opt-out agreement and no central records are kept by the Home Office. Compliance costs are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration and Asylum Bill

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the representations he received on which he based his statement under section 1g (1)(a) of the Human Rights Act 1998 with respect to the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Bill. [76973]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. The statement was based on internal advice which is exempt from disclosure in accordance with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 121, if he will list the dates and locations of the meetings he has had with the US Attorney General since 1 June 1998. [77152]

Mr. Straw: In the period covered by the Question, I have not met personally with the United States Attorney-General. However, I have chaired one meeting of G8 counterparts on 16 December 1998, which was conducted by video conference, at the request of Janet Reno, and spoken with her by telephone from time to time.

West Yorkshire Police

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information was obtained by unauthorised persons gaining access to the West Yorkshire Police internal communications system; and what assessment he has made of the current security of the system. [76977]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that an individual gained access to the West Yorkshire Police voicemail system and was able to access messages left on voicemail boxes that had not been password protected. He also gained access to the Crimestoppers Line.

The security of the communications system is an operational matter for West Yorkshire Police. I understand they have implemented a number of security measures to prevent further breaches. Calls to the Crimestoppers line now go directly to a manned extension and are no longer on the internal voicemail system.

European Elections

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if votes will be published by constituencies as well as by regions in the European elections. [77758]

Mr. George Howarth: Votes will be counted at Westminster Parliamentary constituency level though the regulations will provide that where the same person is acting returning officer for two or more constituencies he or she will be able to combine them for counting purposes. Local results will be communicated to the regional returning officers who will perform the seat allocation calculation for each of the 11 regions.

The results of all local counts will be made public as well as the final regional result.

West Mercia Police Force

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of the West Mercia Police Force police officer posts for 1998–99 were vacant at the latest available date; and what was the average length of such vacancies. [77324]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 18 March 1999]: It is for the Chief Constable to determine the number of police officers in the force, within the resources available. I understand from the Acting Chief Constable of West Mercia that there are 2,063 budgeted posts in the force. On 1 March the force had 52 full-time equivalent vacancies. The average number of vacancies in 1998–99 has been 45, which represents 2 per cent. of the budgeted posts available. It is not possible for the force to provide information on the average length of a vacancy during 1998–99.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 19 January on behalf of his constituent, Sir Stephen Hastings. [77445]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 18 March 1999]: I am sorry that the right hon. Member did not receive an earlier reply to his letter. A full reply was, however, sent on 16 March.

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the Ministers in his Department who are regular users of electronic Red Boxes. [76175]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary for the Cabinet Office on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 651.

Pensioners (Minimum Income Guarantee)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he held with pensioners' groups before increasing the minimum income guarantee for pensioners; and if he will make a statement. [77363]

Mr. Timms: We meet representatives of pensioners' organisation regularly to discuss a broad range of issues. We are determined that even the least well off of today's pensioners should share in rising national prosperity, and the proposed increase from next April in line with earnings will build further on the significant boost we are giving to the incomes of these pensioners this year.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who will have an income below the minimum income guarantee level who will not qualify for the minimum income guarantee. [77552]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) on 11 March 1999, Official Report, column 346.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he estimates will be ineligible for the minimum income guarantee, following the Budget, due to the level of their savings; and if he will make a statement. [77362]

Mr. Timms: This information is not currently available. Estimates of the number of pensioners ineligible for the Minimum Income Guarantee due to the level of their savings are based on the data used to produce the published estimates of take-up of income-related benefits. These estimates are currently being revised following the discovery in December of an error, the effect of which was to understate income brought to account. The estimates will be republished in May. We will then be in a position to provide an answer to this question.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are estimated to be eligible for benefits under the minimum income guarantee for pensioners aged (a) 60 to 74 years, (b) 75 to 79 and (c) over 80 years, (i) in total and (ii) by gender. [75858]

Mr. Timms: The information is not currently available in the form requested.

In total, we estimate there are approximately 1.5 million pensioners in receipt of Income Support who will be eligible for the Minimum Income Guarantee in 1999–2000. Additionally, we estimate there are between about 400,000 and 700,000 pensioners who are not claiming Income Support but who would be entitled to it if they claimed. The estimate is provisional, as revised estimates of the take-up of income-related benefits are currently being worked on.

We will in a position to provide final estimates and the breakdown requested in May, when revised estimates of the take-up of income-related benefits are due to be published.

Notes:

1. "Pensioners" for the purposes of the Minimum Income Guarantee, means single persons aged 60 or over, and couples where at least one partner is aged 60 or above.

2. The figure is rounded to the nearest quarter of a million and does not include pensioners living in residential care and nursing homes.

Minimum Funding Requirement

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will be undertaking the Minimum Funding Requirement review; and if he will list all those involved in the review. [77553]

Mr. Timms: The Pensions Board of the Faculty and Institute of Actuaries have been asked to carry out the review in partnership with this Department. The Department is also advised by the Government Actuary. The Pensions Board may decide to set up technical working groups to research particular aspects. The Confederation of British Industry, Trades Union Congress, National Association of Pension Funds and the Association of British Insurers have been invited to comment on the scope of the review.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recruitment or contracting companies have been required to administer statutory sick pay to workers they contract to other companies since 1998; and what has been the consequent average additional annual (i) premiums for professional indemnity, public liability and employee's liability insurance and (ii) time which a company has had to spend administering the new rules. [77807]

Mr. Bayley: The legislation governing the payment of Statutory Sick Pay to employees engaged on short-term contracts has remained unchanged since 1982. Those provisions were clarified in a Court of Appeal judgment in October 1996 and further guidance to reflect that judgment was issued to employment agencies in 1998. Information on the effect, if any, on insurance premiums and the amount of time on which a company has to spend administering the scheme is not available.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the percentage of those pensioners who are entitled to claim income support who actually do so. [77364]

Mr. Timms: The latest available figures suggest that between 68 per cent. and 79 per cent. of pensioners entitled to Income Support actually claim it. These figures are, however, a provisional estimate following the discovery of an inaccuracy in the published estimates of take-up of income-related benefits. Work continues towards a fully revised set of figures to be published in May.

Note:

"Pensioners" in the context of Income Support, means pensioner benefit units—a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple (counted as one "benefit unit") where one or both members is aged 60 or over.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the (a) number and (b) proportion of widows in each region and nation who are in receipt of occupational pension payments. [76106]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Number and proportion of widows in receipt of occupational pension by Government Office Region/Home Nation (1996–97)

Government Office Regions (excluding NI)	Number of widows (000s) in receipt of occupational pension	Percentage of widows in receipt of occupational pension
All widows	1,760	50
North East	100	53
North West and Merseyside	210	46
Yorkshire and the Humber	190	54
East Midlands	120	48
West Midlands	170	50
Eastern	150	48
London	170	42

Number and proportion of widows in receipt of occupational pension by Government Office Region/Home Nation (1996–97)

Government Office Regions (excluding NI)	Number of widows (000s) in receipt of occupational pension	Percentage of widows in receipt of occupational pension
South East	240	55
South West	160	53
England	1,490	50
Wales	110	52
Scotland	160	48

Notes:
1. The estimates are for all widows including those over pension age.
2. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available.
3. Numbers are given in thousands and are rounded to the nearest 10,000.
4. Due to rounding, components may not sum to totals.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of including entitlement to extended payments of housing benefit to those moving into work who had been in receipt of incapacity benefit alone. [77239]

Angela Eagle: The cost of including entitlement to extended payments of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit to all those moving into work who had been receiving Incapacity Benefit is estimated at £3.4 million. Of this £2.3 million is in respect of claimants on Income Support and Incapacity Benefit and £1.1 million in respect of those on Incapacity Benefit without Income Support.

Private Pensions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what interest rate has been paid to persons who opted out of SERPS and who normally receive a lump sum for investment in their private pension scheme, during the delay in issuing payments by his Department's computer systems. [77658]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) on 2 March 1999, Official Report, columns 710–11.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 250–51, on Select Committee reports, if he will list the occasions on which Ministers discussed the contents of Social Security Committee reports or draft reports of the deliberations of the Committee with members of the Social Security Committee prior to their publications; [77810]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 250–51, on Select Committee reports, if he will conduct an investigation into whether special advisers or civil servants reviewed or discussed Social Security Committee reports, drafts or parts of reports or their conclusions, prior to their publication. [77811]

Mr. Darling: There have been no occasions on which I, or my ministerial colleagues, have discussed reports or draft reports with members of the Social Security Committee prior to their publication.

Also, other than embargoed copies of Social Security Committee reports, issued under House of Commons Standing Orders, neither civil servants nor the special adviser have discussed reports or draft reports prior to their publication. I see no reason or basis for an investigation.

SCOTLAND

Meat Imports

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to stop the import of meat grown abroad in conditions not allowed in the UK. [76737]

Mr. Macdonald: All consignments of fresh meat imported into the UK, whether from other EU member States or third countries, must have been produced in accordance with the harmonised Community rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. Products not subject to Community rules may be imported only if they comply with our national rules. Food which fails to meet food safety requirements can be refused entry into the UK or it can be seized under the Food Safety Act 1990.

Trade implications of any suspension of imports are a matter for the EU Commission. Any action taken or imposed must be in accordance with the sanitary and phytosanitary agreement of the World Trade organisation.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local Government Employees (Pay)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average full time pay without overtime of (a) teachers, (b) local authority manual workers, (c) council APT and C staff and (d) council chief officers in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1993–94, (iii) 1988–89, (iv) 1983–84 and (v) 1978–79, in 1998–99 prices. [76620]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is not available centrally, nor is it readily available from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he is providing to enable councils to fund pay increases for (a) teachers and (b) other local government employees. [76750]

Mr. McLeish: Over the next three years the Government are to provide an extra £530 million in support of Scottish local authorities' revenue expenditure. This represents real terms increases in each of the next three years. It is the responsibility of local authorities to decide how to allocate the money available to them and to meet the cost of pay increases from within their overall resources.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the percentage pay increases agreed in Scotland for (a) teachers, (b) local authority manual workers, (c) council APT and C staff and (d) council chief officers in each year since 1993–94. [76624]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is as follows:

percentage

Year	Teachers	Local authority manual workers	APT and C	Chief officers
1993	1.5	1.5	1.5	1.5
1994	2.3	2.3	2.3	2.0

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

(2) pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border, 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 641–42, if he will require the Chancellor to return the leaked Select Committee report to the Chairman of the Social Security Committee; [77844]

(3) if he will make a statement on the Government's policy when Ministers receive leaked copies of a Select Committee report in (a) draft and (b) unpublished form. [77845]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 1 March 1999, Official Report, column 531.

EU Political Committee

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the agenda for the forthcoming EU Political Committee meeting of 22 March. [77161]

The Prime Minister: The agenda for the 22 March Political Committee has not yet been decided. As has been the case since 1970, draft agendas for Political Committees are not usually circulated until a few days before the meeting takes place, and are often amended up to the last minute.

EU Special European Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the agenda for the forthcoming EU Special European Council of 24 to 25 March. [77159]

The Prime Minister: The timetable for the Agenda 2000 negotiations was agreed at the end of the UK Presidency when the Cardiff European Council concluded that there should be political agreement on the package no later than March 1999. The purpose of the Special European Council is to meet that timetable. The negotiations are being conducted on the basis of a Presidency paper which sets out the issues for discussion. The Presidency regularly updates this document as negotiations progress. A copy of the latest version was placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received from the United States Government on genetically modified organisms since 1 May 1997; on what dates each representation was received; in what form each representation was made; and from which United States department each originated. [77113]

The Prime Minister: None.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to meet the CRE's leadership challenge. [76963]

The Prime Minister: I accepted the CRE's Leadership Challenge on 12 May 1998.

I have made clear my commitment to Britain being a beacon to the world on race equality. This Government are taking a clear lead in improving race equality.

The Lawrence inquiry has done much to identify the problems to which we must all face. With my full support, my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary is developing a comprehensive response to the report. He announced to the House on 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 389–93, his intention to extend the Race Relations Act 1976 to cover all public services. A wider action plan is also being developed.

In my role as Minister for the Civil Service, I am committed to ensuring that the Civil Service reflects at all levels the diversity of our society. I also commend the Charter for Action recently launched by the Minister for the Cabinet Office, the head of the Home Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions, to redress the under-representation of the ethnic minorities in the Civil Service.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 484, when he expects to issue an updated report on the results of military action against Iraq. [77589]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence sent an updated report on the results of Operation Desert Fox to all Members of the House on 18 January 1999.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library his reply to the letter from K. M. Kirk of Paphos, Cyprus, of 20 December 1998, about Iraq. [77355]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 March 1999]: As far as I am aware, the most recent correspondence I have had from Mr. J. M. Kirk was a letter from him dated 3 March 1998.

Correspondence

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to reply to the letters sent to him by the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe on 14 January and 3 March. [77662]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend) on 17 March 1999, Official Report, column 706.

Patten Commission

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that no information from the Patten Commission on policing which is not in the public domain will be shared with (a) any other Government and (b) any private group. [77583]

The Prime Minister: The Commission on Policing is independent. Its terms of reference, set out in the Good Friday Agreement, require it to "consult widely and to report no later than Summer 1999". It is not for the Government to say what the Commission should discuss or with whom. The Commission's report will be made public in its entirety and implementation of its recommendations will be discussed with the political parties and the Irish Government.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects the Patten report on policing in Northern Ireland to be published. [76739]

Mr. Ingram: The Belfast Agreement states that the Independent Commission on Policing should report no later than the Summer of 1999. The Government look forward to receiving the report, which is expected within the timescale established by the Agreement.

Oil Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Governments with whom the United Kingdom Government to Government service and contract agreements allow for payments in oil; and for what dates such agreements were made. [71811]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Payments in oil to the UK Government for supplying goods or services are not precluded under existing rules provided they represent the most cost effective and practical method. It is a matter for individual Government Departments to negotiate appropriate contracts after considering each case on its merits. Because of this, no centralised records are kept of the agreements reached.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Electricity Report

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she plans to hold with the Chairman of the Northern Ireland Consumer Committee on Electricity and the Regulator concerning the report published by Northern Ireland Electricity into the storm on 26 December 1998; and the implementation of the recommendations. [76642]

Mr. Ingram: None at present. Consumers' interest are being pursued vigorously by the Director General of Electricity Supply who is considering the Northern Ireland Electricity report on the storms. He will be discussing his conclusions with both the company and the Chairman of the Consumer Committee for Electricity and then publishing a consultation paper seeking the views of consumers on the action programme proposed by Northern Ireland Electricity. Ministers have requested a further report from and discussion with the company later in the year on progress with the action programme.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the report from Northern Ireland Electricity published on Thursday 4 February into the storm of 26 December 1998. [76643]

Mr. Ingram: Protection of consumers' interests is primarily a matter for the independent Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland. He is considering the report by Northern Ireland Electricity on the recent storms; will meet with the company and the Chairman of the Consumer Committee for Electricity; and then publish a consultation paper.

Birth Defects

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children have been born with (a) Downs Syndrome and (b) other abnormalities in each health and social services board in each of the last 10 years. [76641]

Mr. McFall: The table provides figures for the number of births of babies with Downs Syndrome and other selected congenital malformations notified in Northern Ireland and each Health and Social Services Board area for the years 1986 to 1996 (the latest year for which figures are available).

Northern Ireland

[1] For 1989 and 1990 individual figures for health and Social Services Board areas do not sum to Northern Ireland figures due to additions to the Northern Ireland total being made by the Department of Medical Genetics. These amendments are not available at Board level.

Health Care

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what impact the Chancellor's Budget statement will have on health care provision in Northern Ireland. [76744]

Mr. McFall: The Chancellor's Budget statement confirmed the Government's continuing commitment to modernise the NHS. I am equally determined that health services in Northern Ireland are equipped to provide a first class service, and am considering how this can best be achieved.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the cost of (a) the Northern Ireland Assembly, (b) each of the 10 departments of Government and (c) the offices of the First and Deputy Ministers in the first full year of their operation. [76837]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Assembly Commission recently estimated the operating costs of the Assembly at £36 million in 1999–2000.

Biological Scientists

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many biological scientists are employed in each hospital in Northern Ireland; what are the qualifications required for such work; and what are the salary scales for such posts. [76884]

Mr. McFall: Clinical Scientists are employed in pathology laboratories in the following Northern Ireland Health and Social Services Trusts:

	Number
Belfast City Hospital	35
Green Park	1
Mater Infirmorum Hospital	2
Royal Group of Hospitals	26
Ulster Community and Hospitals	1
United Hospitals	2

The basic entry qualifications to the grade of Clinical Scientist is a First or Second Class Honours degree.

There are three grades of Clinical Scientist, the salary scales of which are set out in the following table.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants in her Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in her Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost of compliance with the Directive. [76803]

Mr. Paul Murphy: To date members of the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments and agencies have not systematically been invited to waive the 48 hour limit. However, a small number of staff who have been identified as working regularly in excess of the 48 hour average limit have signed the waiver. There have not been any refusals.

The cost of the introduction of some minor modifications to existing administrative procedures, particularly record keeping, cannot readily be identified. No additional staffing requirements have been identified.

HEALTH

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his written answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 730, (1) if he will give the total amount of annual fees which is payable to (a) Labour, (b) Liberal Democrat, (c) Conservative and (d) independent councillors appointed to NHS trusts or health authorities since 1 May 1997; [72623]

(2) if he will list the numbers of councillors of each political party appointed to each NHS trust or health authority since 1 May 1997; [72624]

(3) if he will list the health authorities and NHS trusts to which each named individual has been appointed, indicating in each case whether the appointment is as (a) chairman and (b) board member. [73898]

Mr. Denham [holding answers 22 February and 1 March 1999]: Copies of the following information have been placed in the Library.

A list of all individuals appointed to chairman and non-executive positions on National Health Service trust or health authority boards since 1 May 1997 and who were known to be councillors at the time of their appointment. The listing shows their appointment by name, NHS trust or health authority, political party and whether they were appointed as chairman or non-executive member; and a list of the same information but grouped according to the trust or health authority concerned.

These listings include the names of 12 individuals who were not discovered by the database search of 15 February and reported in my answer of 16 February.

Chairmen receive remuneration in one of three bands according to the turnover of their NHS trust or the allocation made to their health authority.

Band 1: £19,285

Band 2: £17,145

Band 3: £15,125.

All non-executive members or directors receive £5,000.

In a full year, the councillors listed (excluding those whose terms of office have ended) would receive remuneration as follows:

	Chairmen	Non-executives	Total
Labour	390,895	990,000	1,380,895
Conservative	51,555	45,000	96,555
Liberal Democrat	62,520	125,000	187,520
Other (including independents)	0	40,000	40,000

Local councillors account for 9.9 per cent. of those serving on NHS boards and receive 8.4 per cent. of the total amount of remuneration payable. They bring to the NHS invaluable experience and commitment to the service of their communities.

All appointments are made on merit in accordance with Nolan principles. Information was not collected on the political activity of all non-executives appointed by the last Government, so full comparisons are not possible.

Free Eye Prescriptions

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners will be eligible for free eye prescriptions in (a) the Medway towns and (b) Chatham and Aylesford in April. [75553]

Mr. Denham: From 1 April 1999, everyone aged 60 and over will be eligible for free National Health Service sight tests. We cannot make population estimates for areas within local authority boundaries. We estimate that there are some 40,000 people aged 60 and over resident in the area of the Medway Unitary Authority.

Medical School Places

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what weighting he will give to regional needs when deciding which universities will benefit from the proposed allocation of an additional 1,000 medical school places; [75924]

(2) in deciding where to allocate the proposed additional 1,000 medical school places, he will conduct an impact assessment on the consequences for (a) public health and (b) community regeneration of approving a new medical school at Hull University. [75935]

Mr. Denham: The responsibility for allocating medical student places in England lies with the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE).

A joint implementation group has been established to take forward this work. The objectives, which were approved by Ministers, have been placed in the Library. The group wrote to all universities in England on 8 January 1999, inviting them to submit bids for a share of the extra medical student places by 12 March 1999. The group will consider all proposals received, and make recommendations to the HEFCE, which will announce the allocations later in the year.

Elderly People (Care)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of private sector care homes for the elderly. [75920]

Mr. Hutton: The Government's policy in this area was set out in the White Paper "Modernising social services".

The commissioning of long-term residential care is a matter for local authorities. The Government have no ideological view as to the choice of private or public ownership. What is important is that the arrangements made by authorities should be based on judgments about best value and optimum outcomes for individual users.

Tobacco

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to raise in the EU Health Council the health effect of EU policy in relation to tobacco growers. [76935]

Mr. Hutton: We expect the German Presidency to include an item on tobacco on the agenda of the Health Council meeting on 8 June 1999. The Commission will report on progress made in implementing the recommendations of its 1996 report on the Community's role in combating tobacco consumption, which includes the issue of tobacco production in the European Union. We intend to indicate our support for co-ordinated action.

CS Gas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times since 1 January 1996 UK chief medical officers have discussed the issue of CS sprays at meetings of their group. [77115]

Mr. Hutton: The United Kingdom Chief Medical Officers meet on an informal ad hoc basis and there is no record of any discussion of CS spray at any of their meetings which have taken place since 1 January 1996.

Termination Payments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by NHS region the termination payments made by (a) NHS trusts and (b) health authorities to (a) chief executives, (b) other board members and (c) senior managers, for each of the last five years. [76476]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: The information available is shown in the tables.

The only data collected centrally for National Health Service trusts relate to the total 'Compensations for loss of office' within the category of 'Executive Director's Remuneration'.

The only data collected centrally for health authorities and family health service authorities relate to the total 'Compensations for loss of office' within the category of 'Non-Executive Director's Remuneration', and to 'Compensations for loss of office' for 'Chief Executive'. The figure for chief executive will be included within the overall total for non-executive directors.

Information was not collected for health authorities and family health service authorities in 1993–94.

Separate data are available for 'senior managers' however it is included here in those figures relating to NHS trusts.

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by region, expenditure by the NHS on advertising in each of the last five years. [76485]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Information about national Health Service expenditure on advertising is given in the following table. It includes expenditure in a number of different areas including recruitment advertising, health promotion initiatives and measures to improve local accountability such as the production of annual reports and information about services.

Opencast Mining

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the results of his investigation into the effects of opencast mining on health; and if he will make a statement. [77196]

Mr. Hutton: The study being undertaken at the University of Newcastle is funded jointly by the Department and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The findings of the study will be reviewed at the Institute for Environment and Health at the end of March as part of an annual review of air pollution research contracts. The results will be made available as soon as the staff undertaking the work are happy that this should be done and publication in a peer reviewed scientific journal is likely. This work will form a part of a wider review of the effects on health of emissions of dust and other substances from opencast coal mining sites which is being prepared by the Department's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants. The Committee hopes to consider this subject at its meeting in October.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Residence Applications

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many fathers had their application for residence awarded in each of the last two years. [77555]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not collected.

Contact Orders

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contact orders were not kept in 1998 resulting in applications to the courts; and how many penalties were awarded by the courts where contact orders were broken. [77559]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not collected.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Osborne House

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster) of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 694, when he will bring forward legislation to repeal the Osborne Estate Act 1902. [77215]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster) of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 694, if the King Edward VII Convalescence Home at Osborne House remains open for new convalescents, [77216]

(3) how many members of (a) the Armed Forces and (b) the Civil Service used the facilities of the King Edward VII Convalescent Home at Osborne House on the Isle of Wight in each of the last five years. [77210]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We plan to introduce the necessary legislation at the earliest opportunity. In the meantime, I can confirm that the King Edward VII Convalescent House at Osborne House remains open for new convalescents.

The figures for use of the facilities offered by the home in each of the last five years are:

TREASURY

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 641–42, (1) if (a) special advisers and (b) officials (i) saw the draft report and (ii) discussed the preliminary draft of the report with (A) the Parliamentary Private Secretary and (B) members of the Social Security Committee; [77852]

(2) if (a) he and (b) his Ministers discussed the Social Security Committee's Draft report with (i) his Parliamentary Private Secretary, (ii) members of the Social Security Committee, (iii) special advisers and (iv) officials. [77886]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 641–42.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made for (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) larger companies of the number of man hours that a company will be required to spend to establish and administer the working families tax credit in (i) its first year and (ii) subsequent years; [76672]

(2) what estimate he has made of the (i) first year and (ii) subsequent year compliance costs for (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) larger companies of their role in administering the working families tax credit system. [76869]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 March 1999]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the draft Regulatory Impact Assessment which was published on 3 February 1999.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the change from the Family Credit programme to the Working Families Tax Credit programme on the number of claimants in Portsmouth. [69935]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit, which will replace Family Credit on 5 October, will have a higher threshold and an increased taper. These improvements will result in an increase in take-up nationally.

The introduction of Working Families Tax Credit will ease the poverty trap by allowing people to keep more of what they earn as they increase their earnings, thereby increasing the incentive to move from welfare to work.

Tax Burden

Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the average net change in the tax burden on individuals since May 1997 in Scotland; [77005]

(2) what is the average net change in the tax burden on individuals since May 1997 in Lancashire; [77004]

(3) what is the average net change in the tax burden on individuals since May 1997 in Wales. [77006]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Figures for tax receipts are not available by region. Financial year figures for UK tax receipts and social security contributions, net of tax credits, as a proportion of gross domestic product were published in table B27 of the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Stamp Duty (Shares)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue from stamp duty on shares if the rate was (a) increased to 1 per cent. and (b) lowered to $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. [R] [74066]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 2 March 1999]: As set out in Table B10 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report, the revenue from duty on transactions in shares and other securities is forecast to be £3.1 billion in 1999–2000. If the rate of duty was raised from the current 0.5 per cent. to 1 per cent., then it is estimated that revenue would be £5.4 billion in 1999–2000 whereas, if it was reduced to $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., then revenue would be £1.7 billion. These estimates take account of the impact the relevant changes would be expected to have on the value of share transactions.

EU Fraud

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) discussions he has had and (b) proposals his Department has put forward at Council of Ministers' meetings in respect of EU fraud; and if he will make a statement. [77778]

Ms Hewitt: Fraud against the Community budget is something which the Government take very seriously and I can confirm that this informs our discussions with other member states at Council meetings. The Government aim to ensure that anti-fraud considerations are taken fully into account when new policies are being developed and new or revised regulations are on the table.

Regular discussions on fighting EU fraud take place and specific proposals are considered at the ECOFIN Council where the Treasury is the lead UK Department. The Commission's annual "Fight against Fraud" report and work programme was discussed at the May 1998 ECOFIN which, under the UK Presidency, was devoted to fraud, financial management and budget issues. The Court of Auditors' Report for 1997 focused on improving financial management and fighting fraud and waste and was discussed at the March 1999 ECOFIN.

The November 1998 ECOFIN discussed the European Court of Auditors' Special Report 8/98 concerning the Commission's services engaged in the fight against fraud. The Council concluded that there must be a policy of zero tolerance towards fraud and called for substantial improvements to be made without delay with fraud inside the Community Institutions as the first target. It called on the Commission to consider all of the options for strengthening the fight against fraud.

At the January 1999 ECOFIN the Chancellor called for a strong independent head of fraud investigations who would have wide ranging powers and rights matched by responsibility and accountability including reporting to the European Parliament and the Council. The March 1999 ECOFIN discussed the Commission's proposal of December 1998 for an independent fraud investigation office, and the 1997 European Court of Auditor's Report. The Council called on the Commission to bring forward amended proposals for a strengthened fraud investigation office, indicating the key elements it would wish the amended proposal to incorporate, which were in line with the Chancellor's January initiative.

There may also be discussions of specific frauds against particular EC programmes in the relevant Council meeting, for instance on allegations of fraud against the EU humanitarian aid programme which were discussed at the November 1998 Development Council.

Budget Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what departmental guidelines govern the content of the Treasury publication, "Budget 99, Building a Stronger Economic Future for Britain"; and if he will make a statement. [77301]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 March 1999]: "Budget 99, Building a Stronger Economic Future for Britain" complies with the Cabinet Office guidance on the work of the Government Information Service.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people paid CGT in financial years (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98; and what is his estimate for (d) 1998–99. [R] [74063]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 1999]: The number of taxpayers with a Capital Gains Tax liability arising in the years 1995–96 to 1998–99 is as follows:

Capital Gains Tax: Number of taxpayers [1]

Thousand

Year	Number
1995–96	100
1996–97[2]	110
1997–98[2]	160
1998–99[2]	190

[1] Excludes companies as their capital gains are charged to Corporation Tax.

[2] Provisional. These figures were previously published in Table 1.6 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1998 (IRS 1998) and have been revised in line with outturn and the March 1999 Budget forecast.

Business Taxes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for each tax levied on businesses (a) the amounts paid in 1996–97 and 1997–98 and (b) his estimate for 1998–99. [75293]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 March 1999]: Detailed historical data on receipts from individual taxes can be found in Chapter 2 of "Financial Statistics".

Estimates of tax receipts in 1998–99 can be found in Table B10 of the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Duty Free

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the increased revenue to his Department as a result of the abolition of duty-free shopping in financial year 1999–2000. [77441]

Dawn Primarolo: Such estimates are sensitive to a whole range of assumptions about the nature of the successor regime and the post abolition marketing strategies of the duty-free operators. There is insufficient certainty on either of these points to make meaningful predictions at this stage.

RAF Airfields (Exports)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions permission has been given by HM Customs and Excise for private companies to export goods from RAF airfields in each of the last five years. [77246]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise does not keep records of such information.

Military Cargo

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if HM Customs' permission was given for a military cargo to be exported from RAF Manston in Kent in May 1998, which subsequently went missing en route to South Africa. [77251]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise did give authority for the loading of a shipment of goods to South Africa, which moved via the UK having been released for export from the Community by Customs in another Member State. Information available at the time of shipment did not indicate that the cargo included any controlled military goods.

VAT Liability

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on changes to United Kingdom determination of VAT liability, pursuant to (a) COM (98) 660 and (b) COM (98) 663; what legislation will be required; and what effect this will have on income to the Exchequer. [74444]

Dawn Primarolo: Explanatory memoranda were placed in the Library of the House in respect of draft Directive Com (98) 660.

Petroleum

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue will be raised in excise duty on petroleum due to changes made since 1 May 1997 in 1997–98 and each of the following four years. [76575]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate the extra revenue raised in excise duty on petrol due to the changes made since 1 May 1997 to be:

£ million

Financial year	Extra revenue
1997–98	350
1998–99	740
1999–2000	600
2000–01	820
2001–02	1,000

The figures have been calculated by comparing estimated revenue streams under the current Government's duty commitments (as shown in table C.1 of the 1998 FSBR and table IB.2 of the 1999 ESBR/FSBR) with an estimate of what revenue streams would have been under the previous Government's 5 per cent. escalator.

Diesel

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue will be raised in excise duty on (a) diesel and (b) ultra-low sulphur diesel due to changes made since 1 May 1997 in 1997–98 and each of the following four years. [76574]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate the extra revenue raised in excise duty on (a) diesel and (b) ultra-low sulphur diesel due to the changes made since 1 May 1997 to be:

Financial year	Diesel	Ultra-low sulphur diesel
1997–98	220	–5
1998–99	570	10
1999–2000	120	430
2000–01	0	900
2001–02	0	1,040

The figures have been calculated by comparing estimated revenue streams under the current Government's duty commitments (as shown in table C.1 of the 1998 FSBR and table IB.2 of the 1999 ESBR/FSBR) with an estimate of what revenue streams would have been under the previous Government's 5 per cent. escalator. It has been assumed that after 1999–2000 all diesel will have been replaced with ultra-low sulphur diesel.

Although it was legislated for under the previous Government, the separate rate for ultra-low sulphur diesel did not come into effect until after 1 May 1997 and has therefore been treated as a change since that date.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Toddington Primary School

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what date he received the Statement of Case from Gloucestershire County Council on its proposals to close Toddington Primary School. [77365]

Ms Estelle Morris: The statement of case was received on 12 March 1999.

Under-fives

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he had with (a) teachers, (b) playgroup staff and (c) parents before proposing guidelines for the teaching of the under-fives; what extra provision he is making in terms of (i) teachers and (ii) buildings for implementing the guidelines; and if he will make a statement. [77367]

Ms Hodge: The Qualification and Curriculum Authority held eight consultative conferences with representatives of Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships, which include providers of early education and parents, before issuing its consultation document on the review of the desirable learning outcomes on 22 February. The consultation document has been sent to EYDC Partnerships, Local Education Authorities, teachers associations and to a sample of schools. Alongside this, the Secretary of State is considering responses to the consultation on the regulation of early education and day care which covered issues including adult:child ratios, qualifications and premises requirements.

DEFENCE

Military Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the airborne exercise in France carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72925]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This exercise was a reciprocal exchange exercise between the Parachute Regiment and the French 1 Regiment de Chasseurs Parachutistes, involving 80 personnel from the Parachute Regiment, which took place in France in September 1997. The only additional cost for this exercise was for personnel to travel to and from France at a cost of £3,100 as exercises conducted under a reciprocal agreement are at no cost to the visiting force because personnel exchange places and use the supporting assets that are already in place.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in, what assessment he has made of the value of and how many personnel were deployed on the air exercises in the USA carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76597]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK was involved in a number of air exercises in the USA in the specified time period, all of which provided excellent and valuable training opportunities for the participating forces. Holland, Brazil, Singapore and Spain also participated in the exercises, with the UK and the US. For fast jet exercises, the total additional cost to the UK was some £1.85 million, with a total of 1,600 UK personnel being deployed in the specified time period, although no more than 500 personnel were deployed for a single exercise. For Maritime Patrol Aircraft (MPA) exercises, the total additional cost to the UK was some £600K, with a total of 550 UK personnel being deployed in the specified time period, although no more than 200 personnel were deployed for a single exercise.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in, and how many personnel were deployed on the jungle training exercise in Singapore carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76590]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 835 personnel from the Royal Marine Command deployed, via Singapore, for a jungle training exercise in Malaysia. The exercise formed part of the Ocean Wave Far East deployment and the additional cost incurred was £51K. The exercises involved personnel of the UK and Royal Malaysian Armed Forces.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were deployed on the jungle training exercise in Thailand carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76593]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 136 personnel of the Royal Marine Command participated in this exercise.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the three infantry battalion exercises in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72971]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 March 1999]: The cost of the three infantry battalion exercises in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998 was as follows:

£ million

Exercise	Cost
Grand Prix 1/97	0.063
Grand Prix 2/97	0.622
Grand Prix 3/97	0.672
Total	1.357

The cost of Grand Prix 1/97 excludes the costs of movement by RAF transport aircraft and from Kenya, as these figures are no longer available. The costs of ammunition and of spares consumed during the exercise are also excluded as these costs are not separately identified.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the combined maritime and air exercise in Malaysia carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76611]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I advised the hon. Member on 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 866, the RN participated in Exercise "Flying Fish" as part of their "Ocean Wave" deployment, the total additional cost of which was approximately £9.8M. The additional cost to the RAF of Exercise "Flying Fish" was some £800K.

EU Directives and Regulations

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what EU directives and regulations affect compensation and pension arrangements for those for whom he and his Department are responsible, both military and civilian. [76960]

Mr. Spellar: MOD military and civilian personnel are entitled to membership of the relevant occupational pension schemes, Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) and the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS) respectively. There are no EU directives or regulations which specifically govern public service pension schemes. However, more general EU directives and regulations governing employment and pay may in some cases have an impact on occupational pension schemes, including the AFPS and PCSPS.

Service Personnel (Homosexuality)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) male and (b) female service personnel were discharged or dismissed on grounds of homosexuality in each of the past 10 years; how many of these, in each year, have challenged the decision at the European Court of Human Rights and at what cost to public funds, under the European Convention's (i) Article 3 (inhuman or degrading treatment), (ii) Article 8 (right to privacy), (iii) Article 10 (freedom of expression), (iv) Article 14 (freedom from discrimination) and (v) other Articles. [76955]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Based on the latest available figures, the numbers of those discharged or dismissed since 1989 are:

Year	Army			RN			RAF
	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total	Total

[1] These figures represent administrative discharges only. They do not include figures for dismissals

Six personnel are currently challenging their dismissals at the European Court of Human Rights. To the best of our knowledge, there have been no other cases in the last 10 years.

All six of the applicants have claimed violation of their rights under:

Article 8—right to respect for private and family life.

Article 14—discrimination on any ground "such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.", of the Convention.

Two of the applicants have also claimed violations of their rights under:

Article 3—torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 5—liberty and security of person.

Article 10—freedom of expression.

The Court, however, declared their complaint under Article 5 alone, and in conjunction with Article 14, inadmissible.

The costs to public funds which can be separately identified are, to date, approximately £11,000, including VAT. There are also internal staff costs associated with defending these cases: these could not be separately identified.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the hazards of exposure to depleted uranium. [74714]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None. The hazards from depleted uranium are well documented in the scientific literature and are reviewed as new information becomes available. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement on 17 February 1998, Official Report, House of Lords, column 21 and that given by the Under-Secretary of State for Defence on 13 May 1998, Official Report, columns 128–29. I have today placed a copy of the Ministry of Defence's Report on Depleted Uranium in the Libraries of the House.

Naval Bases and Supply Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Naval Bases and Supply Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Naval Bases and Supply Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76894]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. A. Trewby to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of people employed by the Naval Bases and Supply Agency and about the Agency's Annual Report as this falls within my area of responsibility.

The Agency is currently complemented to employ 11,232 staff, including 2,954 military staff, compared to 13,350 on launch on 11 December 1996. This number will increase to 11,923 on 1 April this year with the creation of the new tri-service explosives organisation within the Agency. Our 1997/98 Annual Report and Statement of Accounts was published on 27 July 1998 at a cost of £2,930.

Ships Support Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Ships Support Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Ships Support Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76876]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Ships Support Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. D. Coles to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State about the number of people currently employed by the Ships Support Agency, and at its inception; and about the date on which the Agency's report for 1997–98 was published and the cost of its production, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

On 31 January 1999, the number of people employed by the Ships Support Agency was 2,903 (2,460 civilian and 443 military). When the Agency launched in December 1996 its strength was 2,810 (2,450 civilian and 360 military).

The Agency's Annual Report for 1997–98 was placed in the Library of the House on 29 July 1998. External printing of the Report cost £3,393. All production work was undertaken by Agency internal resources.

Pay and Personnel Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Pay and Personnel Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Pay and Personnel Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76897]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Pay and Personnel Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. A. Rowe to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people employed by the Pay & Personnel Agency, and its annual report for 1997/98; as these matters fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the agency.

There are 739 people currently employed by the PPA, and the comparable number was 956 at 1 February 1996, the date of the agency's inception. All staff in the agency are civilians. The agency's report for 1997/98 was published on 23 July 1998 and the cost of production was £19,922.

Medical Supply Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Medical Supply Agency; what was the figure at its inception; on what date the Medical Supply Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [76889]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Medical Supplies Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from B. E. Nimick to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Medical Supplies Agency's manning and Annual Report as these matters fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Medical Supplies Agency.

As at 12 March 1999 there were 354 employees funded by the Medical Supplies Agency. This Agency was formed in March 1996 and the total number of persons in post at 1 April 1996 was 301. Prior to its launch, the combined establishments of organisations that later formed the Medical Supplies Agency totalled 403. The reduction from 403 to 301 was achieved by means such as the removal of much of the military management, the closure of units in Germany and Hong Kong and the loss of a blood collection team. A Military/Civilian breakdown of these figures is shown below:

Period	Military	Civilian	Total
Pre-Agency	138	265	403
1 April 96	61	240	301
12 March 99	40	314	354

A draft copy of the Medical Supplies Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997/98 was circulated to members of the Surgeon General Owners' Review Board on 23 June 1998 and the final version was published on 19 January 1999. The report was written in-house by existing staff. It was designed using Ministry of Defence facilities, without incurring hard charges, and was printed at a cost of £1,204.

Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre; and what was the figure at its inception. [76893]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from S. J. Lloyd to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people currently employed at the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre Defence Agency as this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

A total of 458 people are currently employed by the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre as at 11 March 1999. The figure at its inception in April 1996 was 485.

I hope that you find that this answer gives you the information that you are seeking.

Defence Dental Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which targets the Defence Dental Agency did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. [72838]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 March 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Dental Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from I. G. McIntyre to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the 1997/98 achievement against targets and the monitoring of these targets in 1998/99, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive for the Defence Dental Agency.

The Defence Dental Agency had six key targets for 1997/98 two of which were only partially met. Target number 6 which was to complete all Service Level Agreements with major customers. This target was specific to 1997/98, and although not met within the year due to delays in obtaining signatures from two of our customers, has now been achieved.

Target number 2 which was, for each Service, to achieve a dental fitness target of 75% for all Service personnel, was not achieved in respect of Army personnel. It was recognised when the target was set that the Agency was not resourced to meet it for the Army. It was therefore set as an "aspirational" target in that respect. This target remains the same for 1998/99.

Key targets are monitored continuously and reviewed quarterly. Quarterly results are published and submitted to the Owners Review Board, and the meetings of relevant Customer Advisory Group. Additionally end of year results will be published in the Next Steps Report.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Defence Dental Agency published its report for the year 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [72841]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 March 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Dental Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from I. G. McIntyre to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about publication of the report for the Defence Dental Agency for the year 1997/98, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Dental Agency.

The Defence Dental Agency did not publish a report for 1997/98.

Gulf Veterans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the basis for the statement of 15 February by Mr. Alan Casson of his Department's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit that it is highly unlikely that local populations would have been exposed to any significant amount of respirable dust. [77257]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 18 March 1999]: I believe that the statement to which the hon. Member refers was made in a letter dated 15 February from Mr. Alan Casson, an official in my Department's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit, to a member of the public. The basis for that statement was fully explained in that letter, the text of which is repeated in its entirety as follows:

Letter from Mr. Alan Casson, Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit to a member of the public, dated 15 February 1999:

Thank you for your letter of 19 October to the Secretary of State for Defence, Mr. Robertson, which enclosed a copy of an article from the Independent concerning ill-health in southern Iraq and an alleged link to the use of depleted uranium (DU) based ammunition by UK and US forces during the 1990/91 Gulf. I have been asked to reply and apologise for not doing so sooner.

Both US and UK forces did indeed use DU-based ammunition during the Gulf War. UK forces used a new 120mm tank round which contained a solid DU penetrator core with a protective (non-DU) coating in its Challenger 1 tanks. US forces used 20mm, 25mm, 30mm, 105mm and 120mm ammunition rounds in its tanks, aircraft and ships. The MOD's current assessment is that UK tanks fired fewer than one hundred 120mm rounds against Iraq's military forces during hostilities (which equates to less than 1 metric tonne of DU), although additional rounds were fired during earlier work-up training to establish the round's Mean Point of Impact (MPI). In a paper published in August last year, the US Government reported that US forces in the Gulf had fired ammunition rounds containing some 290 metric tonnes of DU.

It might be helpful if I explained the properties of DU and how the metal used in the manufacture of UK DU-based ammunition is produced. Uranium exists in three forms, known as isotopes. These isotopes are uranium-238, uranium-235 and uranium-234 and, in naturally occurring uranium, are found in the ratio 99.3% ^{238}U:0.7% ^{235}U:0.006% ^{234}U. Uranium in an 'enriched' form is used in nuclear reactors and nuclear weapons. The term enriched is used because the concentration of ^{234}U has been artificially enhanced from that found in naturally occurring uranium. The by-product of this enrichment process is the production of DU, which involved the removal of virtually all ^{234}U and a reduction of the proportion of ^{235}U to a low level. Typically, by weight, DU contains 99.7% ^{238}U, 0.2% ^{235}U and 0.00007% ^{234}U.

It might also be helpful if I explained the potential health hazards posed by the use of DU. Depleted uranium is defined by the International Atomic Energy Agency as a Low Specific Activity material; this means that its level of radioactivity is considerably lower than that of most man-made radionuclides such as plutonium and americium. DU-based ammunition rounds can produce a small amount of radioactive and toxic particulate material when they impact with a hard surface, which could present a health risk if inhaled or ingested. However, this material is fairly rapidly diluted and dispersed into the environment by the weather, to the point where it becomes difficult to detect, usually within a few hundred metres of impact, even with the most sophisticated radiation monitoring equipment. Thus, it is unlikely that anyone other than those in an armoured vehicle hit by a DU projectile or those spending prolonged periods within a few tens of metres of the point at which a DU-based round had impacted with a hard target would be exposed to large enough quantities of the material for their health to be a risk.

Solid DU fragments present only a localised external radiation hazard to anyone handling them as only a very small fraction of the radiation emitted is able to penetrate the (dead) outer layer of the skin and because these fragments are too large to be inhaled or ingested. It would be necessary for a DU fragment to be in direct contact with the skin for tens of hours before any statutory UK dose limit for members of the public would be exceeded and even then would not give rise to any observable medical effects or a significant increase in the long term cancer risk.

Another potential health hazard from DU is posed by its level of chemical toxicity, which is similar to that of other heavy metals such as lead. This could give risk to health problems if soluble DU were to be ingested or inhaled but this is very unlikely as the DU residues found on the battlefield are generally in the form of solid DU fragments or relatively insoluble oxides. Should any of these insoluble oxides be ingested, most would pass straight through the body and the risk of any health effects arising from this exposure route is therefore negligible. The inhalation of insoluble oxides gives rise to effects which result from the radioactive rather than toxic properties of DU. This is because insoluble particles are retained in the lung for prolonged periods and are excreted very slowly and at concentrations unlikely to affect the kidneys which are the organ at most risk from any toxic effects.

The Independent article referred to a paper written by the UK Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) in April 1991 entitled "Kuwait—Depleted Uranium Contamination", which was produced for Royal Ordnance plc (rather than the Ministry of Defence) on a commercial basis. (A copy of this paper is attached for your information.) The paper calculated 500,000 potential deaths if 50 tonnes of DU dust was left in the area.

However, a number of assumptions made in this paper are very far from realistic. Indeed, the paper itself makes clear that it is not a rigorous scientific analysis of the actual situation, but a theoretical appraisal of the possible worst-case effects of firing DU-based ammunition in Kuwait. In particular, the paper assumes that all the DU fired in Kuwait was converted into respirable dust and that all of this dust was inhaled by a very large number of people.

However, as I have already explained above, a DU penetrator core needs to hit a very hard target to cause the burning which produces radioactive and toxic dust. In practice, this only occurs when a DU penetrator hits extremely hard armour such as is found on only the most modern Main Battle Tanks. Such burning does not occur if the penetrator hits other, softer, types of armoured vehicles or if it misses its target and hits the ground. Of the DU-based rounds fired in Kuwait and Iraq, only a relatively small percentage would have hit a target hard enough to cause the DU penetrator to burn. Furthermore, our assessment, based on a large number of trials carried out in the UK and US, is that only about 20% of the DU in a DU-based round that has hit such a target is converted into respirable dust. Since the DU-based rounds were fired in the desert, many kilometres from the nearest village, it is highly unlikely that the local population would have been exposed to any significant amount of respirable dust.

The Government does not have any information concerning the levels of DU currently present in the Gulf and cannot, therefore, comment on this matter. However, the UK tanks which were equipped with DU-based rounds during the Gulf conflict did not operate in the areas in southern Iraq in which it has been suggested that there is an elevated level of ill-health compared to that in other areas in Iraq (see next paragraph). After crossing the Saudi Arabian/Iraqi border north of Hafr al Batin, these tanks, which were part of 1 (UK) Armoured Division, turned east, entered Kuwait and pushed towards Kuwait City. We assess that 1 (UK) Armoured Division came no closer than about 75 kilometres from Az Zubayr and about 40 kilometres from Um Qasr. The maximum range of a DU-based round fired from UK tanks is less than 15 kilometres.

The article attached to your letter and a number of other articles by Robert Fisk have suggested that the use of DU-based ammunition during the Gulf War is affecting the health of some of the Iraqi population. The Government is aware that there have been suggestions, particularly in the Independent, that the use of DU-based ammunition during the Gulf conflict has caused an increase in ill-health, including deformities, cancers and birth defects, in southern Iraq (particularly around Basra, Az Zubayr and Um Qasr). However, the Government has not seen any peer-reviewed epidemiological research data on this population to support these claims and it would, therefore, be premature to comment on this matter. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the illnesses of the types highlighted in the article attached to your letter (or in other Independent articles) are uniquely associated with exposure to DU. The Government would, of course, consider carefully any medical or scientific data which was presented on this subject.

Finally, it might be helpful if I set out the role that the Government has taken to alleviate the suffering of the Iraqi people under Saddam Hussein's regime. Since 1991, the UK has donated around £100 million bilaterally and via the European Union for use in projects throughout Iraq (many of which have specifically targeted the needs of children and widow-headed families), making the UK one of the largest donors. The UK also co-sponsored UN Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 986 which set up the original 'oil-for-food' programme under which Iraq can sell oil to fund the purchase of humanitarian supplies. More recently, we drafted Resolutions improving and expanding the programme so that Iraq can sell US$5.3 billion of oil every 6 months (more than double the original amount).

I hope this is helpful.

A copy of the paper by the UK Atomic Energy Authority, which is mentioned in the letter, has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the response of Mr. Alan Casson of the Gulf Veterans Illness Unit to the letter of Mr. Bill Griffin of Templevisce, Glanmire (reference D/GVIV/a/I), 2 of 23 February, regarding depleted uranium. [77326]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 18 March 1999]: I am advised that Mr. Griffin telephoned a member of my Department's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit (GVIU) on 22 January and discussed a number of depleted uranium (DU) related issues. During this telephone conversation, Mr. Griffin offered to provide the Ministry of Defence with copies of research papers which he suggested showed that the use of DU-based ammunition by UK and US forces during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict has caused a significantly higher incidence of ill-health—including cancers and birth defects—in southern Iraq. So far, however, my officials have not received any further communication from Mr. Griffin. The Government would, of course, consider carefully any medical or scientific data which was presented on this subject.

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 March 1999, Official Report, column 776, when he expects to publish the paper setting out his Department's position concerning the testing of UK Gulf veterans for the presence of depleted uranium. [78299]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am today publishing a detailed paper entitled "Testing for the presence of depleted uranium in UK veterans of the Gulf conflict: The Current Position". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Macedonia

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about arrangements for the sending and receipt of personal mail by Her Majesty's forces deployed in Macedonia. [77494]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Mail to and from Macedonia and the UK is conveyed six days a week Monday to Friday and Sunday from London Heathrow to Skopje via Vienna and return.

Mail to and from Macedonia and British Forces in Germany is conveyed five days a week Tuesday to Friday and Sunday outbound and Monday to Friday inbound from Dusseldorf to Skopje via Vienna.

On both routes the mail is moved by commercial airline as this provides a quick, sustainable and reliable service. This core service is supplemented by RAF flights whenever they are flying to Macedonia and have space available for mail. Additional civilian routings are also being investigated.

The current transmission time to Macedonia is four to five days from the UK and two to three days from Germany. Once the mail has arrived at Skopje, individual units collect and distribute the mail to their service personnel.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army personnel are (a) currently deployed in Macedonia and (b) planned to be deployed in Macedonia; and whether notice has been given to TA units and personnel of intention to deploy them. [77491]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Ten personnel from the Territorial Army are currently deployed in Macedonia, and it is planned to deploy a further six on 22 March. At this stage general notice has not been given to TA units of an intention to deploy them to Macedonia. Individual members are being identified for particular posts as the requirement arises. If there is a requirement for further TA personnel a general trawl will be conducted, as was the case for Bosnia.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what units of the Defence Medical Services will be deployed in support of operations in Macedonia. [77492]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In addition to medical personnel deployed as part of formed units, a number of specialist medical elements have been deployed to Macedonia on Operation "Agricola" with the main contribution being from 2 Armoured Field Ambulance which is supported by a surgical team and a small detachment of RAF medical personnel. Other specialist medical personnel from the three Services fill a variety of posts as part of the existing NATO Extraction Force, Kosovo Verification Co-ordination Centre, the Kosovo Verification Mission and UK headquarters staff.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Internet and e-mail facilities will be available for the personal and welfare use of British forces deployed in Macedonia. [77493]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Internet facilities are not normally provided for personal and welfare purposes on operations. The main means of communication from theatre to home are letter and telephone, both of which are funded or subsidised by the MOD. In other operational theatres, where there is a demand, units have installed and maintained Internet terminals on their own initiative from non-public unit funds.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) current and (b) planned entitlement for welfare telephone calls for personnel deployed in Macedonia; and whether such calls will be available through his Department's satellite links or commercial contractors. [77495]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Service personnel, where operationally feasible, are permitted a weekly 10-minute private call home at public expense while on operations. This concession currently applies to all ground forces in Macedonia (and also supporting elements in Greece). Where possible, calls are made using the Macedonian commercial PTT system. In some locations, where this is not available, arrangements are in hand for civilian contractors to provide a service. In cases where neither option exists, troops are permitted to use the military communications network to make weekly private calls home.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the supply of bottled mineral water to British troops in Macedonia; and if he will make a statement. [77496]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The majority of our forces deployed in Macedonia obtain their drinking water from local sources which have been assessed as safe to drink either by local Government laboratories or the in-theatre Royal Army Medical Corps Environmental Health Officer. For those personnel in specific locations where local water sources are suspect, bottled water is provided. The bottled water supplied to British troops is either potable drinking water or still bottled water. It is not classed as "mineral" water.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of British troops in Macedonia are currently accommodated (a) under canvas and (b) in CORIMEC 20 foot equivalent units and (c) in other shelters; and if he will make a statement. [77497]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Approximately 20 per cent. of the British troops currently deployed in Macedonia are accommodated under canvas, less than 1 per cent. in CORIMEC-type units and the remainder in other accommodation.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many 20 foot equivalent CORIMEC accommodation units are (a) in place in Macedonia, (b) in transit to Macedonia and (c) on order for use by (i) the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps and (ii) other British forces. [77498]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No such accommodation units are currently in place, in transit or on order for use by the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps or other British Forces in Macedonia. However, accommodation will be provided, as necessary, in relation to the size of any force and the timing of its deployment.

"Just in Time"

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he plans to take to ensure that "Just in Time" supply chain logistics support for military operations works effectively. [74661]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 4 March 1999]: "Just in Time" logistics is one of a range of supply management techniques which are being examined by a study team reporting to the Chief of Defence Logistics. Whilst there may be some scope for broadening the existing selective application of "Just in Time" logistics in the defence sector, the degree to which this is achievable would be dependent on the nature of military operations which need to be supported.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the following Territorial Army units are classified as infantry units (a) Bn HQ RRW, (b) RHQ Tpt Regiment, (c) RHQ 104 Regt RA and (d) Bn HQ, Wales. [77535]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 18 March 1999]: Of the units listed, only the Battalion headquarters, Royal Regiment of Wales (Bn HQ RRW) is an infantry unit. This will be replaced by the Battalion headquarters for the new TA infantry battalion for Wales (Bn HQ Wales) in the new structure.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the (a) current and (b) planned future locations, including counties, of the following TA headquarters (a) Bn HQ RRW, (b) RHQ Tpt Regiment, (c) RHQ 104 Regt RA and (d) Bn HQ, Wales. [77534]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 18 March 1999]: The Battalion headquarters, Royal Regiment of Wales (Bn HQ RRW) is currently located in Cardiff, Glamorgan. It will not exist in the new TA structure, but will be replaced int he same location by the Battalion headquarters of the new TA infantry battalion for Wales (Bn HQ Wales). The Regimental headquarters of 155 Transport Regiment (RHQ Tpt Regt) is currently located in Cardiff, Glamorgan, and will remain there in the new structure. The Regimental headquarters of 104 Regiment Royal Artillery (RHQ 104 Regt) is currently located in Newport, Gwent, and will also remain there in the new structure.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions he has answered from the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) since 1 January; and at what cost to his Department's budget. [77483]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since 1 January 1999, our records show that 287 questions have been tabled to my Department by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) of which 240 have been answered to date. The cost to my Department's budget of answering individual Parliamentary Questions is not held centrally, however, the advisory cost limit of answering a Parliamentary Question is £500; therefore answering this number of questions may have cost some £120,000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Mr. Peter Penfold sent any message during 1997 to London from any German or US diplomatic premises in Africa. [75801]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 9 March 1999]: Mr. Penfold was consulted about the answer to a previous question from my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 149, and had said it was not necessary for him to use the communication facilities at the German Embassy to communicate with London. A commercial fax facility was available at his hotel and allowed him to communicate with London directly. This answer was incomplete.

Mr. Penfold has been consulted again, and has again confirmed that he did not use classified communication facilities at the German Embassy to send messages to London. He has added that some of his and the other British High Commission staff's messages were, however, sent by fax from the commercial fax machine in the German Embassy in Conakry. Mr. Penfold believes he did on occasion also use the telephone at the German Embassy to communicate with London.

Other than the unclassified messages sent on commercial channels from the German Embassy in Conakry, Mr. Penfold has said he did not, to his best recollection, use German or US diplomatic premises in Africa in 1997 for sending messages to London.

Dubai

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet with the UAE Ambassador to request an explanation for the failure of the Government of Dubai to respond to his note verbale of 10 November 1998. [76945]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Our Embassy in Dubai asked the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Dubai on 11 March when we might expect a reply to the Note Verbale of 10 November 1998.

Human Rights

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on Protocol number 4 to the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and if he will make a statement. [77001]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The fourth Protocol raises difficult issues, including the need for legislation. We will keep them under consideration.

Firearms

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on the resolution of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly on control of the acquisition and possession of firearms by individuals; and if he will make a statement. [77000]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

The European Convention on the Control of the Acquisition and Possession of Firearms by Individuals was agreed in 1978. It has been signed by the United Kingdom but not ratified.

The Convention has effectively been superseded for European Community (EC) member states by the adoption of an EC Directive on the Control of the Acquisition and Possession of Weapons. This was incorporated into domestic law by virtue of the Firearms Acts (Amendment) Regulations 1992. The Directive contains many similarities to the Convention in that it established procedures for the notification of movement of firearms between member states.

WALES

Airports and Air Services

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what progress has been made on the study of the economic impact of regional airports and regional air services announced in A New Deal for Transport; when these studies will be completed in Wales; and if he will make a statement; [76989]

(2) what plans he has (a) to approve and (b) to initiate developments relating to airports before the completion of the economic impact studies covering airports and air services announced in A New Deal for Transport; and if he will make a statement. [76990]

Mr. Hain: Work is currently under way on an air services study for Wales, in line with the commitment given in the White Paper, "A New Deal For Transport", and the Welsh transport policy statement "Transporting Wales into the Future". The study, which is focusing on the scope for new and enhanced services as well as the role of airports in economic development, is expected to be completed in the summer. I have no plans to initiate or approve developments relating to airports before that time, although I am continuing to consider improved surface access to Cardiff International Airport.

It will be for the National Assembly, in collaboration with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to decide how to take forward the findings of the study in the context of the national airports policy which is being developed.

Links Magazine

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of producing (a) the November edition and (b) the September edition of Links magazine. [77487]

Mr. Hain: The first edition of Links was issued in November 1997 and cost £8,184.

The sixth edition of Links was issued in November 1998 and cost £7,459.

The first edition of Links cost slightly more than subsequent issues because of additional origination costs.

In neither year has there been a September edition.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average cost of producing each edition of Links magazine in the current financial year. [77488]

Mr. Hain: The average cost of producing each edition of Links in the current financial year is £7,577.50.

Printing costs in this financial year for the supplement of Links extra have been £710.00.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Science Budget

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the allocation of the science budget to each research council and other funded bodies, at cash and constant terms for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99 and the planned figures for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02; and the proportion of this money allocated to Scotland. [76860]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 16 March 1999]: Details of Science Budget spend and allocations in cash and at 1998–99 prices are set out in the following tables.

Notes:
Figures for 1995–96 to 1997–98 are taken from the Appropriation Accounts
1998–99 data are the amounts voted in Supplementary Estimates
Figures for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 are the allocations announced on 27 October 1998 but PPARC's 1999–2000 figure includes the International/Contingency Reserve of £3 million.

Allocations of resources by OST, the Research Councils and other bodies funded from the Science Budget are made on a scientific not a regional basis. Decisions are based on the quality of the science or the project involved.

In the years 1995–96 to 1996–97, the latest years for which complete data are available, Research Councils' expenditure in Scotland totalled £121 million and £140 million respectively, 8.9 per cent. and 10.1 per cent. of the Councils' total expenditure (including non-science budget funds). Scottish institutions also benefit from access to UK and international facilities supported by the Research Councils.

University Science Projects

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what projects in university science, supported by his Department's funding, will lead to the ownership of intellectual property by (a) the Wellcome Trust or (b) the Gatsby Foundation. [76071]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 11 March 1999]: None.

Longbridge

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had within the EU on the subject of grant aid to BMW at Longbridge; and what responses he has received. [76256]

Mr. Byers: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, should an aid package be forthcoming, it will be notified to the Commission and clearance sought in accordance with the Community framework for State aid to the motor vehicle industry.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list consents he has given, specifying under what legal authority, for cultivation of genetically modified crops for (a) research and (b) sale; and for each consent the name of (i) applicant, (ii) company and (iii) owner, if different, (1) the area of (A) enclosed and (B) open tillage of the crop, and (2) its location; the purpose of (x) research and (y) sale, together with any purchaser if known, and the period of permission. [72562]

Mr. Meacher: The legal authority for giving consent for the cultivation of genetically modified crops for research purposes or for sale (placing on the market) arises from the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and associated regulations covering the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms. To date 153 consents for research purposes have been issued. The information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it is available on the statutory public register held in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. With respect to the placing on the market of genetically modified crops, I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 5 March 1999, Official Report, column 960.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the (a) number, (b) type and (c) locations of genetically modified crops grown in (i) North East Cambridgeshire, (ii) Cambridgeshire and (iii) East Anglia; [73943]

(2) if he will list the (a) number, (b) type and (c) location of genetically modified crop testing sites in (i) North East Cambridgeshire, (ii) Cambridgeshire and (iii) East Anglia. [73944]

Mr. Meacher: The information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it is already available to the public, as information on all consents given for the cultivation of genetically modified crops is contained in the statutory public register held in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he has discussed with representatives of the biotechnology industry the introduction of a voluntary three-year halt in the planting of herbicide-tolerant genetically modified crops; [77679]

(2) what steps his Department has taken to delay the commercial release of herbicide-tolerant genetically modified crops through voluntary agreements with the biotechnology industry. [77680]

Mr. Meacher: My officials have been discussing with representatives of the biotechnology industry their proposals for the introduction of genetically modified crops for commercial growing by farmers once all relevant approvals have been granted. My officials have also been seeking to obtain assurances from the biotechnology industry that the commercial introduction should be restrained until results from the farm scale evaluations indicate that commercial activity may take place in accordance with the concept of managed development as set out in my statement to the House of Lords on 21 October 1998.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason employees of environmental non-Governmental organisations are not eligible for membership of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment; and if he will make a statement. [76271]

Mr. Meacher: There is no such barrier to employees of environmental non-governmental organisations becoming members of ACRE. The present ACRE includes one member who is employed by Green Alliance, although she serves in her individual capacity and not as a representative of that organisation.

Driving Tests

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people passed their driving test examination in the United Kingdom in 1998. [76818]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1998, 690,745 people passed the theoretical part of their driving test and 581,728 passed the practical part in Great Britain. These figures are inclusive of car, motorcycle and vocational tests.

The corresponding figures for Northern Ireland are 26,360 theoretical driving test passes, and 24,817 practical test passes. These figures also include car, motorcycle and vocational tests.

Car Ownership

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the number of registered car owners in the United Kingdom. [76817]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The record maintained by the Driver and Licensing Agency is a register of vehicle keepers. On 31 December 1998, there were records for 24,840,942 cars and light vans.

R. J. B. Mining Ltd.

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the status of the application by R. J. B. Mining Ltd. to mine the

Cutacre and Wharton Hall spoil tips and land between Over Hulton and Little Hulton (planning application 48800/96); and when he expects it to be determined. [77197]

Mr. Raynsford: The appeal has been referred back to the parties who appeared at the local inquiry to see if they wish to make further representations or fresh submissions in the light of the emerging policies in the draft revised guidance on Coal Mining and Colliery Spoil Disposal published for consultation in October last year. In the light of those representations my Department will consider how best to proceed to determine the appeal and will issue a decision on the appeal as soon as it is possible to do so.

Fast-growing Hedges

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received on the issue of fast-growing hedges; how many responses have been received from local authorities to the recent circular issued by his Department; whom he has consulted other than local authorities on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [77459]

Mr. Meale: This Department has received around 2,500 letters on the issue of fast-growing hedges in 1998 and 1999. The number of telephone calls received has not been recorded.

114 local authorities have so far responded to the circular issued by the Local Government Association on 11 February 1999.

The Department is working with the members of the Leylandii Working Group to draw up a voluntary code of practice on the information to be provided on the sale of hedging plants. The members of the Leylandii Working Group are the Local Government Association, the Horticultural Trades Association, the Arboricultural Association, The British Association of Landscape Industries and the Consumers Association. My Department has contacted a number of other bodies, including the Garden Centre Association, the House Builders Federation, the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health, the Planning Officers' Society, the National Association of Tree Officers, Mediation UK and the Hedgeline campaign group.

We are considering whether there is anything further the Government should do to address the problems caused by high hedges. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to improve the efficiency of the Planning Inspectorate. [77312]

Mr. Raynsford: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 19 March 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the efficiency of the Planning Inspectorate.

Our track record on efficiency is already excellent. Indeed we have achieved our Ministerial target for efficiency gains every year since we became an Agency in 1992.

We have also improved our performance in our main business area, the processing of planning appeals, dramatically in recent years:

Handling times (for 80 per cent. of caseload)

	1996–97	1998–99 (year to date)
Cases by:
Written Representation	25	17
Hearing	47	27
Inquiry	58	41

Note:

All times expressed in weeks from receipt to decision.

But that is not to say that further improvements cannot be made, and we expect our new targets for the coming three year period following the Comprehensive Spending Review to be even more demanding. We have a number of measures in hand to ensure that we rise to the challenge.

Tyres

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to prevent the sale in Scotland of part-worn tyres which are below United Kingdom safety standards. [77421]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Motor Vehicle Tyres (Safety) Regulations 1994 seek to control the safety and supply of part-worn tyres throughout the United Kingdom. The Regulations stipulate that, before being offered for sale, part-worn tyres must have been properly examined internally and externally to ensure suitability for their intended use and must be marked "PART WORN" adjacent to their European or British Standards approval markings. They must also have a minimum tread depth of 2mm across the whole breadth of the tyre. The priority afforded to enforcement of these requirements is a matter for Local Authority Trading Standards bodies.

Airports (Passenger Service Charges)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each airport in the United Kingdom, in rank order, the schedule of passenger service charges for passengers (i) arriving and (ii) departing from and to destinations within (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the EU and (c) elsewhere. [77297]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 18 March 1999]: Passenger charges are levied on the airlines by airports for services and facilities provided by the airport operator. A schedule of passenger charges at UK airports subject to economic regulation by the CAA under the Airports Act 1968 are set out in the table. As the structure of charges varies widely between airports, it is not possible to rank them. Charges are generally shown for domestic and international passengers, and distinctions between EU and other international destinations are not made. Airport levy charges on either departing passengers or arriving passengers, but not both.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his target to reduce carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom by 20 per cent. of the 1997 level by 2010; and if he will make a statement. [77623]

Mr. Meale: At Kyoto, the EU agreed to a legally binding target to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases by 8 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12: under the UK Presidency this target was shared out between the member states, with the UK agreeing to a 12.5 per cent. reduction. Achieving this target must be our priority. But the Government are committed to moving beyond that towards our domestic goal of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

Birth Defects

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into a link between contaminated waste sites and birth defects in the local area. [77800]

Mr. Meale: (a) Following the publication of the EUROHAZCON study on congenital anomalies near hazardous landfill sites, the following research has been commissioned:

The Small Area Health Statistics Unit (SAHSU) (Imperial College) has been commissioned to carry out a study of health effects around landfill sites, including congenital malformations.

(b) The following research has been evaluated.

A one day meeting of experts was held on 26 January 1999 by the MRC Institute of Environment and Health, at the request of this Department, to discuss the links between health effects, especially congenital anomalies, and landfill sites. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss recent research findings, to identify gaps in the knowledge base, and to agree and prioritise further research requirements. The meeting made a number of recommendations for further research work. We are currently considering the best way to take forward these recommendations.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the members of regional development agencies regarding their environmental role; what plans he has to monitor the environmental impact of RDAs; what plans he has to assess the implementation of the regional strategy of the RDAs; and if he will make a statement. [77366]

Mr. Meale: Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) have a statutory purpose to contribute to sustainable development, and a statutory duty to formulate a regional strategy in relation to all their purposes. The statutory guidance we will be giving to RDAs in relation to their strategies, which will be supplemented with more detailed advice from my Department, will emphasise the fact that sustainable development is integral to the RDAs' work. An RDA's strategy will be expected to include an appraisal of the contribution the strategy will make to sustainable development, and how it will foster the four key principles of sustainable development: high and stable levels of economic growth and employment; social progress which recognises the needs of everyone; effective protection of the environment and prudent use of natural resources; and integration of economic, social and environmental objectives. RDAs are aiming to submit their first strategies by October 1999.

We are working with RDAs to develop an effective monitoring and evaluation framework. This will take some time, and we have therefore produced an interim framework which includes a number of core indicators which RDAs should use in developing their strategies. The indicators cover each of the five statutory purposes of RDAs, including sustainable development, and provide both a regional context and a measure of key aspects of RDA activity. Further indicators which reflect the particular features of each region will be developed by the RDAs themselves.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment discussed with the Chairmen of RDAs on 19 February their sustainable development role. Officials, from my Department and from the Government Offices for the Regions regularly discuss with RDAs the work they are doing in preparation for their strategies.

Trading Credit Approvals

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 469, if he will list the local authorities that made trading credit approval applications in 1997–98, indicating (a) the value of each application, (b) the purpose for which the trading credit approval was sought, (c) the political control of the local authority concerned and (d) whether the application was successful. [77618]

Ms Armstrong: My reply to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough on 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 469, listed Trading Credit Approval applications by local authorities considered in 1998. In each case the applications were received in late 1997 or early 1998. Records show a further application, received in January 1997, which is also listed.

Authority	Purpose	Value (£ million)	Political control
Woking	Town centre regeneration	4.1	Liberal Democrat
Sheffield	Waste incinerator	17.0	Labour
Plymouth	TCAs for self-financing schemes	n/a	Labour
Harrogate	Harrogate International Centre	6.6	Liberal Democrat

Note:
None of the applications was successful.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 469, if he will list the applications for trading credit approvals which were successful in 1998–99, and the political control of each local authority concerned with the applications. [77616]

Ms Armstrong: None was successful.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 469, what effect granting the trading credit approval applied for by Harrogate Borough Council would have had on the PSBR for 1999–2000. [77617]

Ms Armstrong: If the Trading Credit Approval of £4.3 million applied for by Harrogate Borough Council for next year had been approved it would have been expected to increase the PSBR for 1999–2000 by that amount.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the appointment of members of the Countryside Agency will be announced. [78297]

Mr. Meacher: I am very pleased to announce that the following people have accepted my invitation to become members of the Board of the Countryside Agency.

Kate Ashbrook

Janet Bradbury

Bishop Alan Chesters

Martin Doughty

Dr. Victoria Edwards

Prof. Philip Lowe

David Woodhall.

Direct Labour Organisations

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour and direct service organisations failed to meet their statutory financial objectives in 1997–98. [78347]

Ms Armstrong: On 18 December 1998, 26 statutory notices were served on 18 local authorities concerning the failure of their direct labour and service organisations (DLOs/DSOs) to meet the required financial objectives in 1997/98. My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses to those notices, and has decided to give nine directions to seven local authorities.

The Directions require authorities to retender the work by 13 December 1999 if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1998/99, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent where the work has to be retendered and where the authority subsequently wish to award the work in-house.

The directions take the following form:

Coventry City MBC (vehicle maintenance)

London Borough of Croydon (building maintenance)

London Borough of Redbridge (building maintenance)

London Borough of Richmond upon Thames (refuse collection, other cleaning, other catering)

South Tyneside MBC (grounds maintenance)

London Borough of Tower Hamlets (construction and maintenance of sewers)

West Wiltshire District Council (refuse collection).

The Secretary of State has also decided to take no further statutory action in respect of financial failure in 1997–98 by:

Colchester Borough Council (grounds maintenance)

London Borough of Hackney (supervision of parking and legal services Harborough District Council (building and grounds maintenance

London Borough of Hillingdon (finance)

London Borough of Merton (refuse collection)

North Somerset Unitary Council (grounds maintenance)

Northumberland County Council (vehicle maintenance)

Oadby and Wigston District Council (management of sports and leisure facilities and grounds maintenance)

London Borough of Redbridge (building cleaning)

London Borough of Richmond upon Thames (building maintenance)

Stafford Borough Council (highway maintenance)

London Borough of Waltham Forest (building maintenance).

Reviews of the financial operations of other councils' activities are ongoing.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering is due to be replaced in 2000 with a duty for councils to achieve Best Value for their local taxpayers. In the run up to Best Value the Government remains committed to ensuring that local authorities' accounts for the delivery of goods and services remain in good financial health and that pressure to minimise costs to council taxpayers is maintained.

Friend the Member for South Swindon (Ms Drown) on 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 285, in which dates of ministerial meetings with companies about genetically modified organisms are provided. No further meetings of this type have taken place since the answer was provided.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 19 October 1998 on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Moston. [77444]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 18 March 1999]: I replied to the right hon. Member on 4 November 1998.

Artificial Insemination

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when work will resume on the revision of the regulations controlling artificial insemination of cattle and pigs. [78298]

Mr. Rooker: The exercise was suspended last April to re-deploy staff to work on lifting the beef export ban. I am pleased to announce that we are now able to resume this work. One of our first jobs will be to write to interested parties inviting them to send in comments on outstanding issues. We aim to progress the work as quickly as possible thereafter.

Crustacea

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn) of 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 428–29, on shellfish, what further representations he has received from shellfish interests about measures to protect lobsters and crawfish. [78300]

Mr. Morley: Some shellfishermen have urged very strongly that stocks need protection through a national UK ban on the landing of V-notched lobsters being introduced at as early a date as possible. I have, therefore, decided that legislation to extend the ban to the whole of the UK should be brought forward as soon as practicable. It already exists in Northern Ireland. The opportunity will also be taken to regulate the landing of V-notched crawfish.

The other measures referred to in my answer to the hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby are linked to changes in EU rules which will be coming into effect on 1 January 2000 and as already announced it is preferable for them to take place at the same time.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to answer questions tabled by the hon. Member for Worsley on 25 January and 9 February 1999 concerning ministerial flights; [73804]

(2) when he expects to answer the questions tabled by the hon. Member for Worsley on 25 January, 9 February and 1 March, concerning ministerial flights. [77853]

Mr. Nick Brown: I replied to my hon. Friend on 17 March 1999, Official Report, column 653.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 327

SESSION 1998–99

8th March—19th March 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
